TO THE READERS AND CORRESPONDENTS OF THE SPORTING MAGAZINE.

We cannot grant the Requeſt of Hector, unleſs he tranſmits the Concluſion of his Epiſtle: what has already come to hand, is ſo imperfect in point of Style, and Conſiſtency, that no Idea can poſſibly be formed of its Merits until we are in Poſſeſſion of the whole.

A Cockney Sportſman is come to hand, and ſhall be attended to.

Soliloquy on the Game Laws in our next.

The Article under the Signature of Veritas, is inadmiſſible, being entirely foreign to our Plan.

Our Correſpondent W. M. will find his Communications attended to, in our preſent Number.—A Likeneſs of Mealy would certainly be a neceſſary Companion to that of Waxey, given in No. 33, which we ſhall find no Difficulty in procuring, and propoſe to preſent our Subſcribers with it in a future Number.

 Erratum. In P. 257 of our Laſt, Line 17 from the Bottom, for 3*s*. read 3*d*.

The Publiſher of the SPORTING MAGAZINE, cannot ſuffer another Volume to make its Appearance, without expreſſing the high Senſe he entertains of the many Favors received from his numerous and reſpectable Correſpondents; it is they who have enabled him, three ſucceſſive Years, to admit what was, for the moſt part, analogous to the Subjects ſpecified in the Proſpectus; and it muſt be their Aid, and his own Exertions, (which he aſſures his ſubſcribers ſhall be unremittingly exerciſed) that will inſure the future Numbers the ſame favourable Reception.

The very large Orders received, during the Summer, from AMERICA, is a Proof that the Work has its Admirers on the other Side of the Atlantic: indeed, there is ſuch a Congeniality in the Ideas of Sportſmen, however remote they may be ſituated, that little doubt can be entertained, but it will be read with equal Satisfaction in every Quarter of the Globe.

The Publiſher has, upon a former Occaſion, mentioned the Neceſſity of Gentlemen completing their Sets, many of whom have, no doubt, availed themſelves of the Notice; but as very few of ſome Numbers remain*, and in Conſequence of the high Price of Paper it will not anſwer the Purpoſe of the Proprietor to reprint them, he again begs Leave to remind them of it.

LIFE of Mr. TATTERSALL.

HE ſucceeded ſo well with Highflyer, at Ely, that he determined to purchaſe a ſtallion of the ſame blood, to cover in Yorkſhire. DRONE was got by Herod; his dam was Lilly, got by Blank. He was a firſt rate horſe to run four miles, and beat Anvil eaſy, at that diſtance; but Anvil beat him as eaſy, the three laſt miles of the Beacon Courſe. He was the property of the Honourable Charles Wyndham, who had ſent him to Lewes, to run for the King's Plate. Mr. Tatterſall bought him for 500 guineas, to be delivered after the race, whether he won or not; he beat Marplot and others, without much difficulty, the firſt heat, and won the ſecond, by at leaſt a length: the judge, however, to lengthen the ſport, determined it to be a dead heat, and obliged him to run a third, which he won. The betters remonſtrated with the judge, upon his deciding it to be a dead heat, and ſufficient evidence was produced that Drone was firſt by more than a length: he perſiſted, nevertheleſs, in his determination, and ſaid he had not forgot the conduct of the judge at Huntingdon, alluding to the following anecdote:

The late Earl of Sandwich, who had much political influence at Huntingdon, preſerved it in a great meaſure, by preſiding at the races, and other public meetings. The mayor for the time being, is the judge of the courſe, and unfortunately miſtaking the colour of the riders, he adjudged the plate to the ſecond horſe: he was afterwards convinced of his miſtake, retracted his deciſion, and ordered the plate to the winner. This created much diſturbance, and he was charged with partiality, and being under undue influence,

fluence. The bufinefs was referred to Lord Sandwich, who declined giving any judgment upon it; but obferved, in the hearing of all the parties and the gentlemen of the corporation, that much lefs inconvenience would have arifen by the judge adhering to his firft decifion, although he had not adjudged the plate to the winner.

The mayor of Lewes acted under the fame opinion, and in this inftance, perhaps, he was right. But a few years afterwards, another fapient mayor being judge, and rather near-fighted, adjudged the plate to a horfe that was more than half diftanced: three horfes ran, and one of them was fo far fuperior to the others, that he was at the winning poft almoft as foon as they had paffed the diftance poft. The firft horfe was not obferved by his worfhip, as he came alone; and as the other two were well matched, the judge enjoyed the race, and inftantly pronounced in favour of the firft of thefe two, declaring that he had won only by a nofe.—The real winner infifted upon the plate, and threatened to bring his action. The mayor, although fully convinced of his grofs error, had fo much regard for Lord Sandwich's obfervation, that he perfifted in his adjudication, and endeavoured to juftify himfelf before his lordfhip, to whom this bufinefs was alfo referred. His lordfhip difmiffed the matter with faying to the mayor, who was a grocer, Mr. Mayor! Mr. Mayor! "there is reafon even in roafting of figs."

Befides Efcape and Drone, Mr. Tatterfall, at the time of his death, had Creeper and Favorite. Creeper was got by Tandam; his dam was Harriot, got by Match'em. He bought him of Mr. Wilfon, fon of the late Bifhop of Briftol, who had great fuccefs with him, and who is well known on the turf for his fkill and gentlemanly conduct. Although Tandem never got a racer of any note, except Creeper and the Yellow Mare, the property of Sir Frank Standifh, Mr. Tatterfall was fond of the breed, as he had in him the blood of Regulus, Childers, Bay Bolton, and the Belgrade Turk. He was the property of Mr. Tatterfall; and about two years and a half paft, as he was in the extacy of copulation, he fell from the mare, and inftantly died, without a groan. If he had been the property of almoft any other man, it is probable that he would have been opened, and in part diffected to afcertain the immediate or proximate caufe of his death; but being dead, Mr. Tatterfall had no further intereft in him, and his curiofity never led him to any enquiry that did not hold out a profpect of gain. Highflyer's death was of an oppofite kind; he firft became dull, and rejected his food; he then gradually fell off in his flefh, until he became the perfect likenefs of what he was when in training; much difficulty of breathing then enfued, and for many months he heaved and groaned in great mifery. Mr. Tatterfall was often requefted by his friends to kill him, to put an end to his torture: but he replied, that if he was dead, he could not by poffibility be of any fervice to him; and as to the expence of keeping him alive, he faid it was but fmall, as his pain fuffered him to eat very little. After his death he was defired to get him fkinned and ftuffed, as Col. O'Kelly had done by Eclipfe, in order to get fome able amateur to take his dimenfions sions and proportions, as Mr. Sain Bel had done those of Eclipse. But he did not see the use of stuffing him with hay after he was dead, as he could no longer cover; he had often stuffed him with hay and corn too, when he produced him money. He never spoke in praise of him after the horse had been buried, but spoke reluctantly of him, as if the horse had died on purpose to deprive him of any future benefit from him.

It has been justly remarked, that a man is best known by a few traits in his character, that the generality of mankind totally overlook, or deem to be insignificant. Mr. Tattersall, when he has been amongst his cattle that were fatting, has been often overheard to say to them, "eat away, my good creatures! eat away, and get fat soon, the butcher is waiting for you, and I want money."

He had also a stallion, which he called FAVOURITE: he was got by Mercury, out of a sister to Old Tat. This mare was bred by him, and the gentleman who bought her, called her Old Tat, as it was a name by which Mr. Tattersall was sometimes called. Favourite was made a present of to him at three years old, by Lord Egremont. This horse was let down in his hip, and was never trained. He has covered only a few mares, and the produce is too young to ascertain their quality.

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

GENTLEMEN,

OBSERVING, in the pedigree of Mufti given in your last Number, he is said to be got by the Damascus Arabian, out of the Godolphin Arabian, own sister to Mirza and the Godolphin Arabian, bred by Lord Godolphin,—it instantly struck me, that, in the history of the Godolphin Arabian, given by Mr. Stubbs, in the first number of the Turf Review, he mentions his being first the property of Mr. Coke, and was a gift from him to Mr. Williams, of the St. James's coffee-house, by whom he was presented to the Earl of Godolphin. I should like much, for the sake of your Magazine, to see this matter set to rights.

I have been highly gratified, of late, by the portraits you have given as embellishments, to the three or four last numbers, more especially as I have the vanity to think I have in some degree been the cause of their appearing, from a hint I took the liberty of giving you some time back.

With every wish for the future success of the Sporting Magazine, I remain,

Gentlemen,

Your's, &c.

 Pray was there ever a mare called the Godolphin Arabian*? Could you procure a likeness of Mealy, as a companion to Waxey, it would no doubt be very acceptable.

ed

ed a ſplendid diſplay of beauty and ſkill to the Woodmen of Arden, whoſe grand annual meeting was attended by moſt of the firſt families in the county. On Monday, the ſilver arrow, given by the Counteſs of Aylesford, was ably contended for, and won in a great ſtile by the Reverend John Dilke, of Maxtock-caſtle, at nine ſcore yards. And on Friday, the grand target was ſhot by forty of the woodmen; the office of Maſter Foreſter was won by the Rev. W. Bree, of Coleſhill; and that of Senior Verdurer by Wriotheſley Digby, Eſq. Thomas Anderſon, Eſq. of Holloway, was Captain of Numbers; and Thomas Palmer, Eſq. Lieutenant. In the lottery for the ladies, Miſs Croxall, and Miſs Boultbee, were the fortunate fair ones; the former obtained the gold arrow, the latter the gold bugle; which were worn, with becoming exultation, as appendages to their dreſs.

INTELLIGENCE EXTRA.

To the many melancholy accidents which have lately happened, we add the following to the catalogue too frequently recited.

ONE Thomas Culley, aged nineteen, ſervant to Mrs. Richmond, farmer, at Bingham, in Nottinghamſhire, was ſent with a gun along with another youth, to ſhoot the birds which preyed upon the ſtanding corn; but unfortunately meeting with another acquaintance, who likewiſe had a gun, it was agreed to ſhoot ſome pigeons; in order to do which effectually, they augmented the quantity of ſhot already in their pieces, which had only been loaded for the deſtruction of ſparrows; and in doing ſo, having previouſly ſat down, whilſt Culley was in the act of reaching a ſcrew ramrod from his own gun, in order to draw the paper out of that which lay acroſs one of his companion's knees, with the muzzle pointed towards, and within a few inches of his (Culley's) left ſide, the piece, which very inadvertently was cocked, went off, and lodged the whole of its contents in his belly, the ſhot having entered below his left ribs, in a riſing inclination towards his lungs: the unfortunate youth fell on his back, the blood guſhing in a ſtream from the wound, and, after uttering a ſhort ejaculation, exclaimed, 'I'm a dead man!' yet, notwithſtanding the ſhocking ſituation he was in, he was conveyed home, where he lingered in excruciating torture until the Tueſday morning following, when he expired.

A ſhort time ſince, as one Cranfield, a boy, of Ely, was riding in Stretham field, the field keeper ſtruck the horſe with his gun, which went off, and ſhot the boy in the back; he was under the ſurgeon's hands for a few days, when he died.

NORWICH, Sept. 9.

Yeſterday morning a young man, ſervant to R. Harvey, Eſq. of this city, having been out with a gun, in company with Jonas Cunningham, a game-keeper, by careleſſneſs and ignorance in carrying the piece, diſcharged the contents through the head of his companion, as they were ſitting upon the ſide of a bank.—This dreadful accident ſhould prove a caution to young men when they carry guns, not to conſider them as play-things, but reflect, that one imprudent or incautious movement, movement, may inſtantly hurry either themſelves, or thoſe with whom they are in company, into eternity.

On Saturday laſt, as Mr. and Mrs Shaw, of Aylſham, were on a journey, in their whiſkey, the horſe took fright, and ran ſo furiouſly down St. Auguſtine's-ſtreet, as to throw them out. Mr. Shaw received no hurt. Mrs. S. was much bruiſed; but we hear, is likely to do well.—The horſe continued his precipitance as far as the Bull, in Magdalen-ſtreet, where he was ſtopped. The whiſkey was ſhattered to pieces.

Mr. Mallet, the wine merchant of Mark-lane, one of the moſt ineſtimable characters of the city of London, loſt his life, a few days ſince on his road to Bath, in conſequence of the following melancholy accident:—He was travelling, with his lady and child, in a gig, when the horſe became ſomewhat unruly, and, paſſing over a rut or ſtone, Mr. Mallet. who had riſen, for the purpoſe of having a better command, was thrown from the chaiſe upon his head; the horſe at the ſame time galloping away, was purſued by his ſervant for more than two miles, before the chaiſe could be ſtopped. When medical aſſiſtance was procured, Mr. Mallet's ſcull was found to be fractured, and he ſcarcely ſpoke again. The diſtreſs of his family, and numerous friends is inconceivable.

HEREFORD RACES, Aug. 14.

An accident happened this day, at the end of the firſt heat, which had nearly proved fatal to ſeveral perſons:—After Doricles and Roborough had paſſed the diſtance poſt, the ſpectators eagerly cloſed in upon the courſe, and Edwin coming up before they had time to give way, he became entangled among the crowd, fell down, and threw his rider a conſiderable way over his head, by which he was much hurt, and another man was ſo dreadfully bruiſed, that his recovery is yet very doubtful.

A few evenings ſince, a gentleman and his wife, in a one horſe-chaiſe, was overſet at Newington Cauſeway, Surry, by a brewer's dray running againſt their carriage. The gentleman was killed on the ſpot; but the lady was taken up without any material injury.

SIR CHARLES TURNER.

At York Auguſt meeting, ſo confident were the principal ſportſmen of Bennington, of Beningbrough's winning the great ſubſcription, that the amazing odds of one hundred guineas to three were repeatedly betted againſt Mr. Garforth's colt by Phœnomenon. The colt, however, won, which did not a little chagrin thoſe great judges who backed the favourites!

Sir Charles Turner does not think the late meeting of Bennington and Benningbrough ſo deciſive of their merits as the reſt of the ſporting world He has agreed to take 7lb. from Mr. Wilſon, in a match of four miles, for 500gs. each, h. ft. The race is to be run at the next Doncaſter meeting. Odds, at preſent, 6 to 4 in favour of Mr. Wilſon's Bennington.

Benningbrough, the horſe on which ſo much money was loſt at York, was purchaſed by Sir Charles Turner, with his engagements of Mr. Hutchinſon. The price was 3000 guineas for this this horse, and two others. Sir Charles lost every race in which he was engaged at York. His passion for the turf does not promise to be of the most profitable kind: a dasher on a race course, with money in his pocket, is at this time so singular a rara avis, that every black leg feels it a point of honour to pluck a feather from his devoted wing.

It is stated to us as a fact, that a few days ago, the duke of Bedford, with a party of Noblemen, about fifteen in number, agreed, after dining, for a frolic, to have their hair cropt, which was immediately carried into execution.

A few days ago was fought the long depending battle between the celebrated Larry O'Brien, and Sam Broughton, when, after a fight of about an hour and ten minutes, victory declared in favour of Larry, to the great satisfaction of a large concourse of people assembled on the occasion. This battle, which had promised much pleasure to the lovers of boxing, on account of the celebrity of the pugilists, did not prove so great a treat as was expected: for Larry's superior skill and manly method of fighting displayed itself in a very eminent degree at the first onset, and he continued, during the whole of the contest, to convince his antagonist that it required a much better man than Broughton to beat him.

A short time since was married John Morris, aged 71, to Ann Sillitoe, aged 72. These constant lovers were united by the same bands 30 years ago, when the lady supposed herself to be in a state of widowhood; but, very mal-a-propos, her former husband, a soldier, afterwards returned from abroad, proved his prior claim, and retook possession: he again, however, grew tired of matrimony, deserted her, and is since dead. On receiving this intelligence, her old enamorato, took a journey of 140 miles to renew his engagement.

ILLUSTRATION of the FRONTISPIECE to the SIXTH Volume.

 In our Magazine for April last, page 48, we gave a description of ASTLEY'S NEW AMPHITHEATRE of ARTS, Westminster Bridge, erected early on the scite of the late Royal Saloon, destroyed by fire on Sunday morning, August 17th, 1794. We now present our readers with a Plate, executed by an eminent artist, of the Inside of the new Theatre, at the time of its being formed into a Race Course, and representing a grand match between the three favorite ponies, Little Driver, Gypsey, and Eclipse.

THOSE of our ancestors to whom we are indebted for the invention of these sports, had no conception that the people of the present day would have transported the diversions of Newmarket, Epsom Downs, &c to almost the very heart of the metropolis; nor was it possible that they should have foreseen the degrees of perfection to which Mr. Astley has trained his little ponies, and the boys who ride them; and which will appear the more extraordinary, when it is considered that the tallest measures only 9 hands 2 inches, from the saddle, when seated; infant riders, 6 hands 1 inch; making in all, 15 hands 3 inches, or 5 feet 3—the ordinary height of a school-boy of about the age 14 years.

A TREA-

A TREATISE on FARRIERY with ANATOMICAL PLATES.

NOW, to perceive objects, there is need of the tension of the nervous parts, which consists in a due influx of the nervous fluid, as has been shown in the former section. But because in a gutta serena there is a palsy of the optic nerve, and consequently of the retina, uvea, and the ciliary processes: it follows, that these parts can neither be tense, nor receive the rays of light; and the pupil will likewise be amplified and dilated, on account of the relaxed ciliary processes. This is the only defect that appears in the eye; for the muscles of the eye, and all other parts, are in good condition, because they receive branches from other nerves that are not affected.

The cause, therefore, which by compressing the optic nerves induces a palsy, is seated either about the thalami, or at the parts which are placed at their entrance into the orbits of the eyes. Or it may be in the optic nerve, or rather in the blood vessels, which lie in its middle part. These vessels, which proceed from the carotid arteries, as well as the other branches which encompass the orbit, may be stuffed with stagnating blood, and so press and distend the medulary tubes of the nerves, and hinder the return of the lympha through the vessels which surround the nerves. This seems to be the cause of a periodical gutta serena, which, when the stagnation of the blood is removed, immediately ceases. Moreover, it appears very probable, that the spurious gutta serena is produced by serum which is shed within the coats of the eye, especially the sclerotic, and so compresses the optic nerve. And this being pressed with the afflux of the nervous fluid, a part of it will gain a passage, and leave sight enough to distinguish light from darkness.

All these effects may be brought about by violent external causes, by blows on the head, by a concussion of the brain, by fulness of the blood, by violent straining, by a vitiated blood, by a great loss of blood, and other vital fluids.

With regard to the prognostics, if it be inveterate and perfect, and the horse old, there is no hopes of a cure. But if it be recent and imperfect, the cause being only in the coats of the optic nerve, and the subject young, it may be sometimes cured. Likewise the periodical gutta serena, which depends only on the stagnation of the blood, may also be removed. But that which succeeds a palsy or other disease of the head, is scarcely ever vanquished.

When a gutta serena is coming on, the horse at first appears shy, especially to strangers. When he is brought into the light, he pricks up his ears, and raises up his head, as if he were looking at the light: he lifts up his feet when he walks, and sets them down with fear. When this disease is quite completed, he will run his head against a wall.

The cure of the gutta serena is a very difficult task, because it is hard to prescribe remedies that reach the distemper. However, we must try to discuss the stagnating humour which compresses the nerves, and afterwards to strengthen the parts affected. When the horse is poor and low, and his blood watery, we may judge serum to be the cause, and then then he may be fired on the poll, becauſe an actual cautery, by exciting pain, will communicate a tremulous and vibratory motion to the fine fibres of the brain, and remove the ſtagnating humour, eſpecially if rowels are made in the neck at the ſame time, which may draw off the humours from the part affected.

On the other hand, if this diſeaſe is cauſed by a ſtagnation of the blood, as when a horſe is plethoric, then the cure muſt be begun by bleeding in the vein neareſt the parts affected, and his body ſhould always be kept open by emollient clyſters and laxatives. When the diſeaſe is inveterate, we muſt have recourſe to cinnabar balls, as the only anchor of hope, which may be compounded in the following manner:

Take valerian root and fennel ſeed of each an ounce; of cinnabar of antimony, half an ounce; of oil of anniſeed, thirty drops: make them into a ball with common treacle, and give the horſe one every morning, except the days on which he takes laxative phyſic.

The two firſt ingredients are very good to ſtrengthen the veſſels, and together with the cinnabar, are very efficacious in opening obſtructions.

Beſides the above, it will be proper to blow ſneezing powder up the noſtrils, which may be either that mentioned in a former ſection, or the extract of the wood of guaiacum, which will purge the head very ſtrongly.

OF MOON-EYES, OR LIPPITUDES.

A LIPPITUDE is the diſtilling of a ſalt, ſharp humour from the eyes, with pain, redneſs and dimneſs of ſight, ſometimes cloſing the eye up. This diſorder has been called a moon-eye, from the ſuppoſed influence the moon has over this diſeaſe; or rather becauſe it ſometimes returns periodically, and, as it has been thought, at certain phaſes of the moon.

This diſorder is but ſlight when there is no blemiſh in the ball of the eye; and though there is a ſwelling of the eye-lids, with redneſs of the eye, if the running grows thick and condenſes.

This diſeaſe generally attacks a horſe when he is paſt five or coming ſix, at which time the eye-lids begin to ſwell, ſometimes ſo much as to be ſhut up, and a clammy water runs down the cheek, ſometimes in a greater, ſometimes in a leſſer quantity. Sometimes the humour is ſo hot and corroſive, as to ſcald the cheeks and to fetch off the hair as far as it reaches. The veins of the temple, under the eye, and on the ſides of the noſe, are generally turgid and full of blood.

It does not attack both eyes always at once, but ſometimes one and ſometimes the other. In ſome the eyes run but little, and in others not at all; but then it is not properly this diſeaſe; eſpecially if the eyes look deadiſh, ſunk, and periſhing. Sometimes the eyes are pretty clear; at others thick and muddy, of a wheyiſh or duſky yellow colour. And yet at beſt they are never ſprightly, but look more weak and dead than they did before the diſeaſe began.

The ſeat of this diſeaſe is generally in the glands of the eyes, the chief of which is the lachrymal gland, placed in the orbit in the upper part of the greater angle of the eye, which pours out a ſalt a ſalt ſerum that is abſorbed by the lachrymal points, and conveyed by a peculiar duct into the noſe. Likewiſe, in the leſſer corner of the eye, there are ſeveral ſmall glandulous bodies, which diſtil a thick ſerum. Under the eye-lids there are other glands placed in a row, which ſend out an humour more glutinous than either the former. Now the excretory ducts of theſe glands conſiſting of nervous and fibrous coats, may eaſily be irritated by a ſalt ſubtile ſerum, and ſo be criſped up or contracted by ſpaſms, inſomuch that the reflux of the blood which is brought by the ſmall arteries, may be in ſome degree prevented by the conſtriction of the veins, while the glandulous tubes may be enlarged by the quantity of the ſecreted humour, and from hence may proceed a great effuſion of a ſalt, ſharp ſerum.

The redneſs and pain which attends this diſorder, may be attributed to the acrimony of the homour, which in this caſe greatly abounds with ſalt of a peculiar nature, and quite different from that which is obtained from any other excremental fluid.

With regard to the prognoſtics, this diſeaſe, as was above obſerved, is apt to go and come, but without any certainty in its periods. Sometimes the running will ceaſe in a week, ſometimes in a fortnight, three weeks, or a month, and then it will retnrn again; but the time is uncertain, and indeed depends much on the method that is taken to cure this diſeaſe. If the diſeaſe is ſuffered to go on, or cannot be cured in two years, it terminates in a cataract, when the humour is ſo hot, ſharp, and viſcid, as to inflame the eyes and glue them up. When the eyes are of a moderate ſize, properly ſhaped, and the continuance of the diſorder after it returns, ſhort; when they look clear, when the humour ſtops, and the ſight continues good, there are great hopes of recovery. When the humour diſtils only from one eye without ſhifting to the other, there is reaſon to expect a cure, or at leaſt to ſave one eye. When the diſtemper proceeds from a violent cold, in conſequence of which the eyes may be cloſed up, and the diſorder may return ſeveral times, yet with proper management, blindneſs may be prevented. The eye ſometimes may ſeem darkened with a ſort of yellow cloud, which may go off again without danger to the ſight, provided there is no natural defect, and it diſappears in a ſhort time.

But the more certain ſigns of recovery, are the ſhort continuance of the running, and the ſlow return; when the inflammation and ſwelling abates; when the eyes, that ſeemed to ſink and decay, grow plump and full; when the muddineſs of the cornea, if any, is gone off, and the pupil looks clear and tranſparent, with nothing diſcoloured behind it; and when the horſe on the road proceeds with courage, chooſes his way, and leaves off ſtarting. But when the eyes look flat and depreſſed, and decay gradually, it is a ſign a cataract is forming, and that the diſeaſe will terminate in blindneſs. When there is a natural defect in the eyes, or this diſeaſe is hereditary, no remedies will reach the diſorder.

The cure is to be attempted by ſweetening the ſalt ſerum of the blood, by carrying it off by other outlets; and ſtrengthening the glands by external remedies. The humours may be diverted from the eye by bleeding, clysters, and gentle purges, and their acrimony may be directed by crude antimony, cinnabar of antimony, Æthiop's mineral. The eyes may be strengthened by wild valerian root, fennel seed, rosemary and lavender flowers, made into balls of two or three ounces, and given the horse every day, unless he has had a clyster or a purge; as also by external applications.

Outward remedies, which have been most in vogue for the diseases of the eye, are tutty, lapis calaminaris, and white vitrol. But it is but lately known that they are all three the offsprings of zinc, which is a semi-metal, and looks not much unlike block-tin. Lapis caliminaris, properly speaking, is the oar of zinc; tutty is the recrement of zinc, which is gained by making brass with copper and lapis caliminaris; and white vitrol is made by dissolving zinc in equal parts of oil of vitrol and water, evaporating the water, and setting it to crystalize.

Bleeding in this disorder is generally proper, unless the eyes sink, and look as if they were perishing. The eyes may be washed two or three times a day with the following water:

Take of white vitrol, two drams: of camphire, one dram: pour a pint of boiling water upon them; and when it has settled, decant off the clear for use. It may be applied to the eye and the parts about it, with a bit of sponge or a fine rag.

Or mix white vitrol with fresh butter, and put a bit of the size of a horse-bean into the greater corner of the eye. This, with proper internal medicines, will often prove sufficient. When the veins that lie near the eye are turgid and full of blood, bathe them several times a day with vinegar or verjuice, till they are brought to their natural size. The horse may be purged with the following drink:

Take lenitive electuary and cream of tartar, of each four ounces; of Epsom salt, three ounces; of solutive syrup of roses, two ounces; mix these with a pint of warm water gruel, and give it the horse in a morning fasting. Some time after, his feed should be scalded in bran, with moderate exercise.

To attenuate or thin the blood, and keep the horse's body open the following may be given once a week;

Take of Epsom salt, an ounce; succotrine aloes and gum guaiacum, of each, half an ounce; make them into a ball with common treacle, and roll it in wheat flour.

On the intermediate days he should have a ball made with an ounce of wild valerian root, half an ounce of cinnabar of antimony, and half an ounce of gum guaiacum, for two or three months till his eyes look clear and well. The valerian root may be some times changed for the same quantity of dried sage or lavender flowers.

When the horse's eyes are sunk, and look as if they were going to perish, you may try what good feeding will do, with a sufficient quantity of oats; for when horses have been hard worked and low fed, this will often succeed without any other means, taking care at the same time to let his labour be moderate. You may safely wash his eyes twice a day with two parts of water and one of brandy.

HUNTING

HUNTING the PANTHER.

From VAILLANT'S TRAVELS into the Interior parts of AFRICA,

"I REQUESTED permiſſion," ſays the Author, "to paſs two or three weeks more at Saldanha, which was granted me by friendſhip, but with much difficulty; I however improved it to the beſt advantage, and my whole time was divided between ſhells, plants, and hunting, the latter above all, which was my ruling paſſion, continually expoſed me to the greateſt dangers; and acquired me a reputation for intrepidity, which was ſpread to the diſtance of ten leages around.'

One evening, having returned very early, I found waiting for me at our houſe, one of the inhabitants, named Smit, a perſon with whom I was not acquainted. He had come to requeſt our aſſiſtance againſt a panther, which having for ſome time taken up its reſidence in that canton, carried off, regularly, every night, ſome of the cattle; and, as his propoſal gave me great pleaſure, I readily agread to it. Happy at having an opportunity of hunting this animal according to rule, I truſted I ſhould be able to revenge myſelf for the terror which one of the ſame ſpecies had occaſioned to me in Saldanha Bay.

Having agreed to ſet out next morning, we engaged ſome young men in the neighbourhood to join us. Obſerving that they did not conſent with a good grace, I endeavoured to make the moſt timid aſhamed; and this gave a kind of ſpur to the reſt. When about to depart, we collected all the dogs we could find; each armed himſelf cap-a-pie; and, when properly equipped, we all ſeparated, as if we had been about to give an aſſault. To enjoy a few hours reſt, and prepare myſelf for the fatigues of the next day, I threw myſelf on my bed, but impatience and joy prevented me from cloſing my eye-lids. By the break of day I reached the plain, with my eſcort, where Smit and a few friends where waiting for us. We amounted in all to eighteen hunters; our dogs formed a pack of the ſame number: and we learned that a panther had carried off a ſheep during the night.

One of the barrels of my fuſee was loaded with very large ſhot, and the other with very ſmall bullets; beſides this, I had a carbine loaded with balls, which was carried by my Hottentot, who followed me. The country being very open, we obſerved only a few detached buſhes here and there; but we were obliſaed to examine all thoſe which we found in our way with great precaution.

After ſearching above an hour, we found the ſheep, one half of which only had been devoured by the panther, and we were now certain by this mark that the animal was not far diſtant, and that it could not eſcape us. A few minutes after, indeed, our dogs, which till then had done nothing but range through the fields without any order, all of a ſudden collected themſelves, and, preſſing together, ruſhed forwards two hundred paces from us, to a very large buſh, where they began to bark and howl with all their might.

Diſmounting from my horſe, and running towards the buſh, I took up my ſtation upon a ſmall eminence, at the diſtance of fifty paces; but, looking behind me, me, I obferved difmay painted in the countenances of all my companions. John Slaber, one of my hoft's fons, a coloffus fix feet high, came, however, and ftood clofe by me! faying that he would rather lofe his life than defert me. By the palpitation of his heart, and his difordered looks I concluded the poor youth depended little on his own courage, and I perceived that he had need of fome refolute perfon to revive his drooping fpirits. Whatever might have been his terror, I am of opinion that he thought himfelf in more fafety near me, than in the middle of his daftardly companions, whom we faw ftraggling through the plain, and keeping at a very refpectful diftance.

They had all cautioned me, in cafe I fhould get near enough to the animal to be heard, that I ought not to cry faa, faa, becaufe thefe words would make the tiger furious, and that he would fpring upon the perfon who had pronounced them fooner than upon any of the reft: but as I was in the open plain, and in a fpot where I could not be encumbered, I repeatedly cried out faa, faa, both to encourage the dogs, and to drive the animal from its hold, but all my attempts were in vain: the animal was as much frightened as the dogs; the former not daring to come forth, nor the latter to enter the bufh. Among the dogs, however, I obferved fome maftiffs, on which I might have depended, had their ftrength been equal to their courage. My bitch alone, the fmalleft in the pack, always appeared at the head of the reft; and alone penetrated a little way into the bufh. As fhe knew my voice fhe was a good deal animated, and became much fiercer on that account.

In the mean time the tiger fet up a dreadful howling, and I every moment imagined that I faw him fpring forward. The dogs, on the leaft motion which he made, retreated with precipitation, and fcampered away as faft as their legs cou'd carry them. Some mufket fhots, however, fired at random, at length determined the animal; he inftantly ftarted up, and this fudden apparition was a fignal for every body to decamp. John Slaber, himfelf, who, formed like a Hercules, might have grappled with the animal, and ftrangled him in his arms in a moment, became confufed, and being overcome by terror fled towards the reft, and abondoned me to my fate. I was therefore left with no other attendant but my Hottentot; and the tiger, to gain another bufh, paffed at the diftance of fifty paces, which gave us an opportunity of faluting him in his paffage with three difcharges of our mufkets.

The bufh in which he took fhelter was much fmaller, and neither fo high nor fo thick as that which he had quitted. Some traees of blood, which I obferved, gave me reafon to believe that I had wounded him, and the redoubled fury of the dogs convinced me that I was right in my conjecture. Part of my people then approached me, but the greater number of them had entirely difappeared.

We harraffed the animal for above an hour more, and fired above forty fhots into the bufh, till at length being tired, and lofing all patience at this fport, which produced nothing, I mounted my horfe, and with great precaution went to the fide oppofite to the dogs, imagining that, while his attention was engaged in defending fending himſelf from them. I might eaſily ſurpriſe him behind. The event ſhewed that I was not deceived; I ſoon obſerved him ſquatted down, and making uſe of his fore paws to defend himſelf from my little bitch; for ſhe approached ſo near him, continually barking, as almoſt to be within his reach. When I had taken a proper aim, I diſcharged my carabine, which I inſtantly dropped, in order that I might lay hold of my double-barrelled fuzee, which I carried at the bow of my ſaddle. This precaution, however, was needleſs; the animal did not appear; and, after I had fired, I ſaw nothing more of him. Though I was certain that I had hit him, it would have been hsghly imprudent to penetrate immediately into the thicket. Not hearing him, I ſuppoſed that he was dangerouſly wounded, and calling out to ſuch of my brother ſportſmen as were collected together——"My friends," ſaid I, "let us all advance towards him, in a cloſe line afront; if he is ſtill alive, and makes his appearance, our pieces diſcharged at once, muſt deſtroy him. What riſque can we run?" Upon hearing theſe words they all anſwered with one voice; but their anſwer was in the negative. In ſhort, my propoſal was reliſhed by nobody. Fired with indignation at their timidity, "Friend," ſaid I to my Hottentot, who was no leſs animated than his maſter, "the animal muſt either be dead, or extremely ill. Get on horſeback, approach in the ſame manner as I did, and endeavour to diſcover in what ſituation he is, leave me to guard the entrance; and if he attempts to eſcape, I hope I ſhall be able to diſpatch him. We may complete the buſineſs without the aſſiſtance of theſe poltroons." He had no ſooner entered, than he called out to me, that he perceived the tiger extended at his length, without any apparent motion, and that he believed him to be dead. That he might, however, be ſure of it, he fired one ſhot more; upon which I ran up, my whole body being agitated with gladneſs and exultation, while my courageous Hottentot ſhared in my tranſports. Joy having redoubled our ſtrength, we dragged the animal to the open plain; and when diſplayed to view, he appeared to be of an enormous ſize. I then began to take his dimenſions with the utmoſt exactneſs. I turned him over and over again in every direction, and examined him with the greateſt care. I ſurveyed him with a kind of pride. —This was my firſt attempt, and the tiger, which was a male one, happened to be prodigiouſly large. From the extremity of his tail to the tip of his muzzle, he meaſured ſeven feet two inches, and in circumference two feet ten. I obſerved in him all the characters of the panther, ſo well deſcribed by Buffon; but in the ſettlements here, he is known by no other name than that of the tiger. This appellation has become prevalent, though in this part of Africa there are no real tigers; and though there is a very great difference between theſe two animals. The Hottentots call him garou gama; that is to ſay, the ſpotted lion.

In general, in the ſettlements near the Cape, the panther is much more dreaded than the lion. The latter never approaches without giving warning by dreadful roarings. He himſelf gives the ſignal for defence, as if he ſhewed greater confidence in his ſtrength, or made his attack tack in a nobler manner. The other, on the contrary, unites treachery to ferocity; he approaches always without noise, glides along with great dexterity, seizes every advantage, and, springing upon his prey, carries it off before any one suspects that he is near.

I had afterwards frequent opportunities of seeing several of these animals, as well as of another species, called by the Dutch luypar, or leopard of the French, and a third species, still smaller, called the cat-tyger, and by Buffon, the osselot.

When I had finished my observations on my panther, and had drawn a figure of him, we began to take off his skin, and my timid companions approached gradually, when they saw us quietly at work. The reader may easiy imagine how much they were ashamed, and what marks of confusion were displayed in their countenances. Ought they not to have blushed before a stranger, who, engaged for the first time with a ferocious animal, had remained firm, and shewn more courage than they, though they had all been born and educated, as one may say, amidst the monsters of Africa?

When I had flayed the animal, my Hottentot wrapped himself up in the skin; and, after saluting my bold fellow-hunters, we returned to our lodgings.

We marched in triumph, escorted by several dogs, whose masters had first disappeared, but they would not approach near us. The tiger's skin struck them with great awe; and when my Hottentot, to terrify them more, turned round, making a kind of motion towards them, they retreated with as much precipitation, as if the tiger had been at their heels; which afforded us no small diversion.

The BEAR and other BEASTS.

IN this state of general alarm some were for shooting Sir Bruin, but the majority was for taking him alive; but who was to do it, and how was it to be done? became the question.—A man, at last, offered himself, on condition of being first treated with a chearing glass; accordingly, this committee of general safety, made a subscription among themselves, and gave him enough of the good creature to put fear out of his head. It should have been mentioned, that on the alarm, some of the people proceeded to inform the justice of the situation of affairs.

The justice, a gentleman of great respectability and good sense, had not, till now, heard of the ludicrous circumstance of the constables taking the bear and the monkey to prison; as he had committed the old man, &c. but for a few days, he naturally thought that the constables would keep possession of their property till they were liberated. He revolved in his mind what was best to be done, and, as there was every appearance that the bear, if not soon caught, might prove as severe a marauder as the Dragon of Wantley, or the Dun Cow of old, found himself somewhat puzzled, what method to adopt, he certainly adopted the most prudent one, which was that of sending a man on horseback, leading another horse, to bring the old man from prison—wisely thinking that no one was so ſo capable of bringing Sir Bruin to a proper ſenſe of his duty, as he who had already held him in ſubjection.

We muſt now return to the hero who had undertaken to confine Sir Bruin. This paragon of courage, after having, in imitation of his illuſtrious predeceſſor More, of Moor-hall,

———Drank, "to make him mighty, pondered how to proceed to action; at length he hit upon the expedient of providing a rope, with a nooſe at the end. Being thus equipped, he cautiouſly ſtole (as if he had been uſed to ſtealing) up to the bear, and, with a dexterous hand, threw the nooſe round his neck, and drew it tight. Sir Bruin having now ſated his appetite, and being merrily diſpoſed, roſe up on his hind legs, and moved a minuet, by way of making his grateful acknowledgments for the very comfortable meal he had made.

The multitude, which till now had kept an awful diſtance, ſeeing Sir Bruin ſo tame, immediately advanced, and every one was for giving proofs of valour, by beating him with ſticks, or pelting him with ſtones. The conſtables, ſtill ſteady to their point, inſiſted on conducting him to the blind-houſe, which luckily was now empty. They proceeded to that place of confinement, but in going down the ſtreet, poor Sir Bruin met with great and unparelled perſecutions: one valiant fellow, in particular, beat him every now and then with a flat iron bar. Sir Bruin, taking the blows as ſo many broad hints to make him exhibit, endeavoured frequently in his progreſs to oblige his attendants; he ſhowed his dexterity at tumbling, and would have danced, if he had been allowed time.

At length he was confined: the conſtables exultingly locked the door, and ſtood guard, anxiouſly waiting for the old man's arrival. In the courſe of half an hour, they diſcovered the venerable bear-warden and his conductor, riding haſtily down the ſtreet. The old man was conducted with tears in his eyes, to Sir Bruin: after a few mutual hugs and congratulations, they departed, taking the horſe and caravan. The old man put Sir Bruin and Jackoo into the caravan, and proceeded to Devizes, where they ſtopped till the woman was liberated by due courſe of law. The fidler, or rather the performer on the pipe and tabor, was conſidered as a fit ſubject for his Majeſty's navy, and conſequently ſent to a regulating captain, who forwarded him and his vile inſtrument of noiſe on board.

The people of * Biſhop Cannings, on hearing the above ſtory, immediotely ſent notice, that, on the firſt of April next, they intend to reſign their charter to the people of Chippenham.

Roman Races.

THERE is now exiſting, at Rome, a faſhionable diverſion, which retains nothing of the ſavage

* Biſhop Cannings, is a place near Devizes, famous for the pond out of which the villagers endeavoured to rake the moon, ſuppoſing it to be a green cheeſe. At this place, likewiſe, they dunged the church ſteeple, thinking to make it grow as high as the famous ſteeple at Saliſbury. Here, too, the man hedged in the cuckoo. The famous diſh of boiled lobſters and turnips was invented at this place, by a man whoſe name we have forgotten.

savage barbarity of the combats between the gladiators of old. Some of the Roman princes and nobility delight in training up horses for the race, not as in England, with riders on their backs, but by themselves at full liberty, spirited by their own natural ardour and emulation, which the concourse of spectators seem to inspire them with. Eight or ten horses, commonly barbs and little mean-looking creatures, are kept in a direct line, by a cord stretched breast high; these horses all start the moment the cord is dropped. In the carnival races (which are the greatest of any) the course is usually in a long street of Rome, from thence called Il Corso, or Race-street, which, on this occasion, is gravelled all over; it is about 865 toises in length. It has been twice observed, by a stop watch, that, by means of a signal, this distance was ran in 141 seconds, being about 37 feet in a second. This swiftness will be found considerably greater upon due reflection, than it at first appears to be.

It is manifest that we cannot allow more than two strokes, or galloping progressions, in one second, since each stroke requires at least three really distinct instants of time; the one when the horse springs from the ground, that in which he is seen bounding through the air, and another when he touches the ground again; so that two strokes to a second imply six separate instants, scarce distinctly perceptible in so short a time. These horses being of a small size, and running over 37 feet in a second, must advance above 18 feet each stroke, and nearly equal to four times the length of their bodies, taken from the breast to the crupper. It is true that this length is more than doubled by the extension given to their fore and hind legs in their gallop. All things considered, how can the swiftness of the English horses be greater? but there are certain cases wherein truth exceeds the limits of probability, and the following is one of them:

A M. du Fay, in 1737, wrote from Newmarket, that the English four-mile course*, where he was a spectator, was ran in eight minutes, wanting three or four seconds; these miles are 826 French toises, which gave more than 41 feet and 2-3ds each second, or near 5 feet more than the barbs at Rome. It is very remarkable, too, that these run at full freedom, whereas the English racers are charged with the weight of the rider. Moreover, this velocity of 41 feet and 2-3ds, in a second, is a pretty common degree of swiftness; for out of ten, which started together, the horse which came in last was not above 12 or 15 paces short of the first; and what is more, it is asserted, that the same course has been several times ran over in six minutes and six seconds. This is confirmed by a person who has often betted at Newmarket.

Now this velocity, which amounts to above 54 feet in a second, is, to that of the barbs, almost as 3 to 2. It should be further observed, that, instead of an English mile, or a small matter more, which is the measure of the Roman course, that of Newmarket is four miles, a space too long for any horse to keep an

* The English mile was fixed by Henry VII. at 1760 yards, of 3 feet each, and consequently contains 5230 English feet, equal to 4957 Paris feet, or 826 Paris toises, the proportion of the English to the French feet being as 1352 to 1440.

equal speed all the way, and it is certain he must slacken towards the end; consequently, the maximum of the velocity must be above 54 feet in a second, and especially nearer the beginning of the course. It is accordingly said, that the famous running horse, Stirling, sometimes ran the first mile in one minute, which is at the rate of 82 feet and an half in a second!—an inconceivable swiftness, even supposing it a little exaggerated, as is probable it was; but for further satisfaction we find it confirmed by Dr. Maty*. If such a velocity had continued some seconds, it might have been fairly pronounced, that the horse went swifter than the wind, it being very seldom the most violent wind makes so much way.

The greatest known velocity of a ship at sea, is six marine leagues in an hour; and supposing the ship to take the third of the velocity of the wind which impresses it, the speed of that wind would not amount to 80 feet in one second.

* Dr. Maty was a librarian at the British Museum, and author of the Journal Britannicum, in good esteem. "There are," says the Doctor, "two courses at Newmarket, the long and the round; the former is exactly four English measured miles, 380 yards, or 7426 yards equal to 3482 French toises; the second is not four English miles, wanting 420 yards of it, that is, only 6640 yards, or 3116 toises. Childers, the swiftest horse in the memory of man, ran the first course in seven minutes and a half, and the second in six minutes and forty seconds, which amounts to 40 feet 5 or 6 French inches in a second; whereas all horses since, are at least 7 minutes and 50 seconds, in performing the former, and 7 minutes the latter; that is, 44 feet and 5 or six inches to a second.

"These," continues Dr. Maty, "I look upon as certain; and it is commonly supposed, that these racers cover, at every stroke, a space of about 24 English feet:" this differs but little from my own conjecture, of about two strokes in a second. Each stroke would be about 18 and a half French feet, for the swiftest barb at Rome, and 22 or 23 for the English racers; so that the swiftness of these should be to that of the barbs, nearly as 4 to 3.

SINGULAR PUNISHMENTS.

THE known influence of ridicule, over the minds of men, has frequently urged legislators to the adoption of punishments, which, to superficial observers, appears preposterous and absurd.

The Count de Buat, in his antiquities of France, says, that among the antient inhabitants, a man, convicted of perjury, was stripped, and compelled to pass the remainder of his days like a wild beast. "Since he has forfeited the character of a man," said they, "he ought no longer to wear clothes."

The ancient Poles sentenced a calumniator to walk on all fours, and to bark for a quarter of an hour like a dog.

Among the Franks, the punishment for stealing a sporting-dog, was to walk three times round the market-place behind the dog, and kissing his posteriors during the whole time. For stealing a hawk, the culprit was sentenced to pay a fine of eight crowns, or to expose his posteriors to the beak of that voracious animal, until he had lost five ounces of flesh.

Boemus, in his Mores Gentium, remarks, that in those Mahometan countries, where customs and ceremonies prescribed by the Alcoran are rigidly observed, a criminal has a plank embellished with foxes' tails hung round his neck, and, after parading the ſtreets for ſome time, is then diſmiſſed on paying a fine.

Ingratitude of a Dog.

Inſtance of Ingratitude in Richard the Second's Greyhound. Tranſlated from Froiſſart, by Sir John Bouchier, Lord Berners.

AND, as it was infourmed me, Kyng Richarde had a grayhounde called Methe, who always waited upon the kynge, and would know no mans els. For when ſoever the kynge dyd ryde, he that kept the grayhound dyd lette hym loſe, and he wolde ſtreyght runne to the kynge and faune uppon hym, and leape with his fore fete uppon the kynge's ſhoulders. And as the kynge and the Erle of Derby talked togedder in the courte, the grayhounde, who was wont to leape uppon the kynge, left the kynge and came to the Duke of Lancaſtre, and to him the ſame friendly continuation and chere, as he was wont to do to the kynge. The duke, who knew not the grayhounde, demaynded of the kynge what the grayhound wolde do. "Couſin," quod the kynge, "it is a great good token to you, and an evyl ſygne to me." "Sir, how knowe you that," quod the duke—"I know it well," quod the kynge, "the grayhounde meket you here this daye as Kynge of Englande, as ye ſhalbe, and I ſhalbe depoſed; the grayhounde hath this knowledge naturally, therefore take hym to you, he will followe you, and forſake mee." The duke underſtoode well thoſe words, and cheryſhed the grayhounde, who wold never after followe Kynge Richard, but followed the Duke of Lancaſtrie.

Honourable Sporting.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

Gentlemen,

TO communicate to the ſporting world a few obſervations on the modern mode of obtaining and giving ſatisfaction for an affront, by the would-be men of honour, I truſt that an inſertion of them in a publication ſo extenſively circulated as the Sporting Magazine, will be the beſt means of conveying my ſentiments.—Your compliance, therefore, will greatly oblige, Gentlemen,

Your humble ſervant,

A True Briton.

Alderſgate-ſtreet,
Aug. 20, 1795.

It is a circumſtance of much ſurpriſe, that the greater part of thoſe who are poſſeſſed of an affluent fortune, (which is certainly the moſt deſirable attainment of all mankind, excepting that of health) cannot exiſt without ſo frequently giving offence to each other. We ſeldom hear of a group of the nobility and gentry of the preſent day, at any public meeting for the purpoſe of enjoying conviviality, who conclude it without ſome one, at leaſt, of the company, pouring ſcarcaſtic inſinuation on the conduct of his companion. The exalted dignity of the perſon, againſt whom any report is directed which tends to defame his character, urges him to a determination that his adverſary ſhall not eſcape his notice with impunity. Satisfaction, therefore, is the only alternative. Accordingly, an amateur in the ſcience of duelling is procured, as a ſecond, who is requeſted to be the bearer of a challenge to the adverſary adversary of the offended hero; and appointing the time and the fatal spot on which he will demand redress: if accepted, the necessary preparations are made, and the parties do not fail to attend duly at the place appointed; but lo! ere the moment arrives which, probably, if they stood the contest like true Englishmen, would deprive one or both of their existence, the one perhaps with real, but the other with pretended astonishment, behold the Peace Officers! whose interference, of course, puts an end to the otherwise bloody conflict, and the undaunted heroes are taken into custody, till ample security is given for their future good behaviour.

Such is the truly honourable manner in which many duels have, of late, been conducted; but it must be admitted that there are many exceptions to the contrary. For when, perchance, a defamation of character, or the like, occurs between the true sons of Britain, and they resolve on deciding it in a manner so justly applicable to the name they bear, neither the appointed place and time, nor any thing which might deprive them of displaying their valour, will come within the hearing of those who are vested with power to debar them.

EXHIBITION of DEXTERITY by a numerous Company of PERFORMERS.

N. B. Admission to the Theatre gratis, but a collection will be made during the Performance.

THIS company (although by number entirely unknown) has had, for a considerable time, large claims on public notice. Their professional exertions have been very great, and the result of their too close application has somtimes subjected them to very painful and disagreeable consequences. But, notwithstanding all their attention, the just reward of merit has been parsimoniously witheld from them; and what every honest man must deem their lawful tribute, very few of them have obtained. The various manœuvres of slight of hand, they have wrought up to the utmost degree of perfection; and their performances have been frequently found to produce the greatest wonder and astonishment

Their theatre is not circumscribed within the narrow limits of any particular building, but comprehends the extensive range of every street in the metropolis, and every fair and race in the most distant counties of England. This unlimited sphere of action, doubtless, classes them amongst itinerants, or strollers; but their creditable appearance has induced many to mistake them for gentlemen. Indeed, their address and assurance enables them, without the least embarrassment, to adopt the grave habit of the clergyman, or the splendid accoutrements of the military Officer. They formerly considered themselves as a necessary appendage to the performances at all the principal places of amusement, and were always busily employed in entertaining the public during the tiresome period which preceds the opening of the doors: but lately, the managers of those places have taken considerable pains to prejudice them in the public opinion, and have peremptorily insisted on their removal, with which they have reluctantly complied, intending intending to return the first opportunity which might present itself.

The places in which they now commonly perform, are Cheapside, Fleet-street, Cornhill, St. Paul's Church-yard, and the Bank. Their predilection for the City, arises from the accomodating connivance of the marshal-men, who never impertinently interrupt them, although they well know they perform without a licence.

Like former conjurors, they are very partial to exercising their professional abilities on rings, purses, watches, and pocket-books, and they can remove them from their possessors without their knowledge. Some of the older members of this company have been sent, (owing to a defect in their professional abilities) at the expence of Government, to our colonies in New South Wales, and the cost has been deemed but trivial, compared with the advantage which the public may derive from their absence.

Still this company does not visibly diminish; as from their various nurseries, full grown plants are constantly supplied, which have been carefully cherished under the fostering hands of a *blind man, and a celebrated bruiser.

INSTANCE of INGRATITUDE.

IN the year 1769, one Rossiter, a young Irishman, came to Leghorn in search of adventures, with no other recommendation than the deportment of a gentleman, added to a fine figure and countenance.

Soon after his arrival, a lady, whose personal property was considerable, saw, and became violently enamoured of him; which was soon succeeded by a direct proposal on her part (no uncommon thing in Italy) to live with her.

As he had been previously informed of her circumstances, and was pleased with her person, he immediately closed with the offer; and they, in consequence, resided together in all the warmth of love, and intimacy of marriage.

Her passion for him had, at first, prompted her to disregard the common law of modesty; after cohabition it grew to such excess, as to trample on all prudence; for not satisfied with having purchased a lieutenancy for him in the Tuscan army, she anticipated his every wish, more than supported his profusion, and on being obliged to visit her relations in a distant part of Italy, entrusted him in her absence with her jewels, her money, and, in short, every thing she owned.

Can you suppose that a man so cherished, and so relied on, could betray a confidence of this nature! should you wonder at it, how much greater will be your surprise when I tell you, that he not only robbed her of her property, but her life.

She returned to Leghorn sooner than she had intended, being pregnant by this monster, who received her with every mark of unaltered affection; but that same night murdered her in the very bed-chamber that had so often been the guilty scene of her weakness weakneſs and affection; a place that ſhould, of all others, have been inviolable.

The deed was ſoon diſcovered, and Roſſiter apprehended, judged and condemned to the gallies for life.

Previouſly to the execution of this ſentence, he was led out before the troops of the garriſon, when his ſword was broken over his head, his uniform ſtripped from him, for the coarſe habit of a galley ſlave; and thus, with a halter about his neck, was he delivered over to his puniſhment, under every mark of degradation and infamy.

Yet even this wretch, thus ſtigmatized, could create affection in the female ſex, who took every opportunity of ſupplying him with food; and one, a woman of condition, exerted all her intereſt to obtain his releaſe, for the purpoſe (it is ſaid) of marrying him; but the good Leopold rejected the petition with horror, declaring he ſhould look upon that man as a diſgrace to his court, who could intercede on ſo wicked an occaſion. How more than brutal was the affection that could attach itſelf to ſuch a monſter as Roſſiter!

Description of the celebrated Dog-Kennel belonging to Sir W. Rowley, Bart. at Tendring Hall, Suffolk, (a beautiful Engraving of which was given in our Laſt) accompanied by a Ground Plan of the ſame.

NEATNESS and convenience are moſt happily blended together in this compact kennel, and the whole gives no bad ſpecimen of the taſte and judgment of the munificent proprietor, who planned it himſelf, without any reference to more ſumptuous edifices.

The ſituation is to the eaſtward of the noble manſion erected by the late Admiral Sir Joſhua Rowley, father to Sir William, at the diſtance of about half a mile. From near the kitchen garden, it has a moſt pictureſque and beautiful appearance: from this ſpot the view is taken.

The kennel is placed in a deep valley in the park, a ſituation admirably adapted for the purpoſe, being equally defended from the cutting eaſterly winds, and the heat of the ſun in its meridian, by a thick ſkirting of park and foreſt trees. Not having the advantage of a rivulet to water the courts, that want is amply ſupplied by a pump, which, by means of different cocks, turns the water to every part of the premiſes.

The entrance to the building is at a.

a, Is a paſſage, having on the right a coal houſe b, and on the left, c, the feeder's reſidence, which is in the convenient cottage ſtyle, with a neat bed-chamber over it.

d, Is the boiling houſe, with two coppers at e.

f, Is the furnace of a flue, which paſſes under the adjoining room, viz.

g, The hunting kennel, or principal lodging room; this room is 20 feet by 18 in the clear, and 18 feet high, paved with flag ſtones. The beds, or benches, which cover almoſt the whole area, are of an excellent and original contrivance, being lathed like ſome bedſteads, and all made to fold up with joints, for the convenience of waſhing the floor beneath them. By means of the flue at f, this room is heated to any temperature; and the hounds, after ſevere severe chases, and in wet weather, are rendered dry and comfortable in a much less time than they would be by any other means.

h, The kennel, or lodging room for the young hounds. This is of the same dimensions as the preceding, and enjoying all the same conveniences, except the flue, which would here be useless.

i, Several small kennels for bitches, previous to gestation.

k, Several small kennels, for bitches with young puppies.

l, Paved court to the hunting kennel.

m, Feeding house, one half of which is open, the rest under cover.

n, Paved court to the young hounds' kennel.

o, Pump ; p, q, stone water cisterns.

r, Great grass yard for airing the hounds belonging to the hunting kennel, containing about an acre and three quarters.

s, s, s, Avenue of lime, chesnut, and other trees in the great grass yard, forming a most excellent shade for the hounds.

t, Grass yard for the young hounds, containing about one acre and a quarter, with lime, French ash, and other trees, for shade.—N. B. The size of the plate would not admit shewing the boundaries of this yard, without diminishing the scale.

Tendring Hall is beautifully situated in the parish of Stoke-by-Nayland, in Suffolk, which is separated from the county of Essex by the navigable river Stour, which runs from hence to Stratford, Dedham, Maningtree, and Mistley, where it receives vessels of considerable burthen, and proceeding on about ten miles further, discharges itself into the ocean at Harwich.

The hunt has been established about seven years; and we run no risque of being contradicted when we say, that, with regard to the excellence of the hounds, the regulations, and the management of the pack, which consists of thirty-six couple, it is inferior to none, of similar magnitude, in the kingdom.

Situated on the borders of two counties abounding with excellent covers, and every way well calculated for fox hunting, the worthy Baronet, greatly esteemed by the neighbouring gentry, and beloved by a numerous and respectable tenantry, proves himself a true descendant of Nimrod ; while his lady, in the prime and bloom of life, adorned with every female virtue and accomplishment, and not less esteemed and beloved by all ranks of people than her husband, frequently enjoys with him the sports of the field, and convinces the world that the most delicate habits of thinking and acting are not incompatible with being charmed with the music of the hounds, the delights of the chace, and the health-giving exercise of equestrian diversions.

Dreadful CASE of the HYDROPHOBIA.

ON Saturday, August 1, William Brewer, of Tilchurst Common, aged about four or five years, of a healthy constitution, was bit by a mad dog ; his face was torn in a shocking manner, three teeth in the upper jaw being torn out at the time, and one more came out a few days afterwards. Medical assistance was called in on Sunday, and on Monday

Monday the child was sent to be dipped in the sea, and returned on the Thursday following: on Friday the wound looked vastly well, and the child was immediately supplied with the Tonquin remedy, (composed of musk and cinnabar) which he took as long as he was able to swallow. The child, to all appearance, went on exceedingly well till Saturday, August 15, (two weeks after the bite) when he seemed a little feverish, which the parents attributed to his playing on the common the preceding day, and over-heating himself, as on Sunday be was not worse.

On the Monday morning early, symptoms of the hydrophobia, or dread of water, (the peculiar characteristic of this complaint) took place; the child was very thirsty, and on having some herb tea applied to his mouth, the most violent spasms ensued, attended with such horrid distortions of the muscles of the face, as made him a most terrible and frightful object; his eyes were fiery and staring; his mouth (which was full of frothy saliva) either wide open, or biting a very large cord with which he was tied in the cradle, and which probably he would have severed, had he not lost his teeth; his voice was most tremenduously hoarse and loud; his whole body so much convulsed, that it was with great difficulty he could be kept in his cradle, notwithstanding it was apparently secured with strong cords; in short, the violence of the spasms caused such disfiguration in his face, that it did not appear human. All these dreadful symptoms were produced by wetting the lip merely with a feather dipped in liquid; nay, even by wiping the eyes with a wet cloth, in order to remove the perulent discharge from them, produced similar symptoms, but in not so violent degree.

The situation of the child at this time was so dreadful, as to render the administration of internal medicine impossible; indeed, such an attempt would have appeared cruel and inhuman: the spams this day were very frequent, but towards evening the child appeared more composed, and the next day (Tuesday) the spasms were less frequent and less violent; the child, at intervals, being able not only to swallow as wells solids as fluids, but that with such a degree of eagerness and voracity, as could not be satisfied: finding the child could now swallow, the Tonquin medicine was ordered to be continued; he passed the night much as he had the evening, and the next morning, (Wednesday) although he appeared to answer rationally, yet when not spoken to by the parents, talked incoherently, but generally expressing his dread and fear, particularly of dogs, and often desiring his mother to keep from the water; his thirst was great, and though he seemed to swallow with less avidity, yet it was evidently attended with difficulty, as not more than half of what liquor was given passed into his stomach, the remainder returning with some degree of force on cloths which this difficulty of swallowing rendered necessary to be placed; yet this temporary desire for liquids had its good effect; for the frothy saliva collected in such abundance in the mouth and throat, if this palliative relief was desisted from any length of time, as to produce symptoms of suffocation; the sight was now evidently gone, although although the eyelids were open; as the child got weaker, so were the spasms (which now became universal) less violent, nor was the dread of water so visible, though declutition was performed with some difficulty: under these dreadful symptoms did the child labour until Friday the 21st, when there were evident signs of approaching dissolution; the pulse frequent and extremely low, the voice inarticulate, and paralysis of the right leg and thigh; the spasms were general, though weak, until the middle of the night, at which time the child died, being the 21st day after the bite, and five days after the first appearance of the hydrophobia.

ON HUNTING.

LETTER XXIII.

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

GENTLEMEN,

I Have again taken up my pen in the pursuit of my favorite topic; and, as my last letter treated principally of the qualifications and attainments necessary to fox-hunting, I shall now, with your leave, continue my observations thereon.

The enthusiasm of a fox hunter should not be checked in its career; for it is the very life and soul of fox-hunting. If it be the eagerness with which you pursue your game, that makes the chief pleasure of the chase, fox-hunting surely should afford the greatest degree of it, since you pursue no animal with the same eagerness that you pursue a fox.

Observe strictly, that your hounds run in a good stile when a fox is sinking in a strong cover! that is the time to see the true spirit of a fox-hound. If they spread not the cover, but run tamely on the line of one another, they are not the sort that will give you satisfaction. A fox-hound, that has not spirit and ambition to get forward at a time like this, is at no other likely to do much good.

With respect to the beauty of a fox-hound, we call a fox-hound handsome when he is strong, bony, of a proper size, and of exact symmetry; and fitness is made essential to beauty. A beagle may be pretty; but, according to my idea of the word, a fox-hound cannot: but as it is not to be supposed, that you will keep a pack of fox-hounds for the pleasure of looking at them, without doubt, you will think goodness more necessary than beauty. Should you be ambitious to have a handsome pack of hounds, on no account ought you to enter an ugly dog, lest you be tempted to keep him afterwards.

"I once heard an old sportsman observe," says Mr. Beckford, "that he thought a fox, to shew sport, should run four hours at least; and, I suppose, he did not care how slow his hounds went after him." This idea, however, is not conceived in the true spirit of fox-hunting, which is not to walk down a fox, or starve him to death, but to keep close at him, and kill him as soon as you can. I am convinced a fox-hound may hunt too much; if tender nosed, and not over hurried, he will always hunt enough: whilst the highest-bred hounds may be made to tye upon the scent, by improper management, for it more frequently is owing either to want of patience, or want want of mettle, than to want of nose, that a hound does not hunt well.

It is youth and good spirits which suit best with fox-hunting: slackness in the men, occasions slackness in the hounds; and one may see by the manner in which hounds hunt, what kind of men they have been accustomed to. The speediest hounds may, by degrees, be rendered slow; and it is impossible for the best to do their business as they ought, unless followed with life and spirit. Men who are slack themselves, will always be afraid of hurrying their hounds too much; and by carrying this humour too far, will commit a fault which has nothing to excuse it. The best method, to hunt a fox, they say, is never upon any account to cast the hounds; but, on the contrary, to let them tye upon the scent as long as they will, and that they will hit it off at last. I agree with them, partly: it certainly must be the best method to hunt a fox, for by this means you may hunt him from morning till night; and, if you have the luck to find him, may hunt him again the next day: the likeliest method however to kill him, is to take every advantage of him that you can

All hounds go fast enough with a good scent; but it is the particular excellence of a fox-hound, when rightly managed, to get on faster with an indifferent scent, than any other hound: it is the business of an huntsman to encourage this; and here, most probably, the hare-hunter will fail. He has been used to take his time; he has enjoyed a cold scent, like a southern hound; and has sitten patiently upon his horse, to see his hounds hunt. It is, to be sure, very pretty to see; and when you consider that the hare is all the time, perhaps, within a few yards of you, and may leap up the next minute, you are perfectly contented with what you are about; but it is not so in fox-hunting. Every minute that you lose is precious, and increases your difficulties; and while you are standing still, the fox is running miles. It is a satisfaction to a hare hunter to be told where his game was seen, though a long while before; but it is melancholy news to a fox-hunter, whose game is not likely to stop.

I believe I mentioned to you in a former letter on hare-hunting, a great fault which I had observed in some harriers from being let too much alone,—that of running back the heel. I have seen a pack of high-bred fox-hounds do the same, for the same reasons.

When hounds flag from frequent changes, and a long day, it is necessary for a huntsman to animate them as much as he can; he must keep them forward, and press them on; for it is not likely, in this case, that they should over-run the scent: at these times the whole work is generally done by a few hounds, and he should keep close to them: here I also fear that the hare hunter will fail.

It is at a time like this, that good sportsmen may be of great service to hounds; it is the only time that they want encouragement, and it is (I am sorry to say) almost the only time that they do not receive it. Those who ride too forward in the morning, will in the evening, perhaps, be too far behind; and thereby lose an opportunity that is offered them of making some amends for the mischiefs they have already done. When hounds flag from frequent changes, and the huntsman's horse sinks under the fatigue of a tiresome day, then it is that sportsmen may assist them; such as know the hounds should then ride up to them: they should endeavour, by great encouragement, to keep them running, and get those forward that may be behind; for, when hounds that are tired once come to hunting, they tie upon the scent, and, by losing time, lose every chance they had of killing the fox,—great encouragement; and proper and timely assistance only, can prevent it.

Having proceeded thus far with my observations on fox-hunting, I shall, for the present, take my leave of you, and remain,

Gentlemen,

Your's, respectfully,

ACASTUS.

THE FEAST OF WIT:

OR,

SPORTMAN'S HALL

AT a time when the papal see had rather more importance than it has possessed of late years, a noble Roman told Julio the Second, that he lamented his holiness should take so active a part in the war against France, as St. Peter had only given him the key of the church to prevent discord and open the door to reconciliation. "It is true," replied the holy father, "that my predecessors have only made use of St. Peter's key, but I now take off the rust and brandish the sword of St. Paul." "But you must remember," replied the nobleman, "that Christ bid Peter return the sword to the scabbard." "Not before, but after he had cut off the ear of an impertinent fellow," replied the Pope.

GENERALS.

General Alarm produced General War, which brought on General Calamity, General Scarcity, and General Want; providentially, these have been superceded by General Harvest, which will restore to us General Plenty, and we hope soon General Peace.

A gentleman unfortunately borrowed by a sheriff's officer from his company, no sooner entered their usual hospitable roof of fast bind, fast find, than he sent for his attorney, whom he most pleasantly addressed in the words of Mellefont in the Double Dealer, "Maskwell, welcome—thy presence is a view of land appearing to my shipwrecked hopes." When the attorney as happily carried on the metaphor, but saying, "Come, trouble not your head, I'll release you 'ere to-morrow morning, or drown between you and the attempt." When the prisoner at parting rejoined, "There's comfort in a hand stretched out to one that's sinking, though never so far off."

QUACKS.

One observes in his handbill, that besides the living, hundreds that are dead might have witnessed to the virtues of his specific, which has never been out of his family. Another charges all persons, upon the peril of their mortal welfare, not to neglect taking his medicine a month longer, as at that time they will be rendered ineffectual, by an unfriendly aspect of the planets!

MILITARY

MILITARY ANECDOTE.

A German peasant, newly enlisted in the army, was scarcely arrived at the regiment, when he was sent with others upon a skirmishing party, and approaching a wood from whence the musket balls flew pretty thick, he stepped out of his rank, and making a sign to the enemy to desist, at the same time exclaimed, "Why, what the devil are you about, don't you see there are people a-coming."

When a Turkish ambassador came first to Vienna, to several ladies who paid him a visit, he presented a number of curiosities; but giving to some twice the quantity he gave to others, the former in the triumph of their vanity, caused him to be asked the reason of this preference, were informed, it was because their mouths were twice as wide as those of their competitors.

BON MOT.

Legendre, the French deputy, in his late abuse of Madame Stael, in the Convention, compared her to Circe. When the lady was informed of this, she instantly said—"I can readily believe it, for I have transformed him into a beast."

A certain Dean had purchased of a Scotch divine a sermon, which he preached the Sunday morning following at a cathadral church. On the same evening he went to hear a sermon preached in the same church by a Rector, and judge of his surprise and mortification, when he found that it was verbatim the same with that which he had himself delivered to the same congregation in the morning.—Ashamed and confounded, he addressed the gentleman who sold it to him thus—"Villain, did you not engage, that the manuscript sermon you sold me was original?" "You may depend upon it (said the other dryly) you had the original manuscript. That was only a copy which I afterwards sold to the Rector."

The following is a letter from a father in Sunderland to his son at Newcastle:—"Son, I have sent Peggy with the old mare: thou and she can ride back by turns. I am told thou makest little progress in thy learning, for which thou art an ass, and I am thy father.

BON MOT.

In the neighbourhood of the metropolis there is a chapel, with good cellars underneath, well stocked advertised to be let or sold. A parson and another gentleman passing that way a few days since, it was sarcastically observed by the latter, that concerns so well suited to each other would not long remain unoccupied. "You mistake, Sir," answered the reverend gentleman, "that which you suppose to be a recommendation to the premises, is exactly the reverse—for few PARSONS like to PREACH OVER their LIQUOR!"

CROSS READINGS.

"A concise review of British literature,—containing a kitchen, laundry, chambers, brewhouse, and cellars—most eligibly situated, and well adapted for an hotel,—although the British have lately had a reinforcement.——For particulars application may be made before the time—adequate to the importance and value of the—local advantages which are obvious obvious to any common obſerver, —which it is thought will be effected without difficulty.—He adds that there had been an engagement between—the dining-room, drawing-room, and fifteen other fire-rooms.—The reſult of this has been what many people expected, the loſs of—extreme bad weather for the ſeaſon."

The Mahometans believe that women have no ſouls; we chriſtians ſee that they have now loſt their bodies; therefore they cannot be human, but muſt be, what we always thought them—angels.

Many of the ladies who returned by the late ſhips from India, ſay, that the paſſions of our Engliſh nabobs are ſo abſorbed in making money, that they are as cold and unfeeling as ſo many frozen oyſters!

General Faro is allowed to poſſeſs uncommon attractions, and to play his cards with great tactical dexterity. The manual exerciſe he has at his fingers' ends. He is admirable at cocking, and there is no manœuvre of which he is not completely maſter. He is alſo a dealer in tricks, which ladies of faſhion are not averſe to; but is ſo capricious in his temper, that he has been often known to ſend many of his company away very much diſſatisfied from his table. He is of a ſhuffling character, and his points are very cutting, particularly when he is ſatirically diſpoſed, and inclined to make game of others. He has been ſeldom known to give a greater looſe to his good humour than on a late occaſion, when, in company with Old Nick, he was witneſs to the clumſy manner in which his friend Oldknow was employed in ſqueezing a lemon.

INDISPUTABLE FACT.

On the inqueſt taken on the body of one of the ſoldiers, who lately cut his throat in Chatham Barracks, a poor fellow, (the companion of the deceaſed) was examined touching the evident ſigns of lunacy betrayed by the deceaſed, previous to his committing the horrid act, when, after ſpeaking of him as an honeſt, ſober perſon, &c. ſolemnly declared on his oath, "He never knew him guilty of ſuch an act before in all his life."

When we view the preſent ſhapes of the ladies, we are inclined to ſuppoſe them only half gone; but when we ſurvey their head ornaments, we find them completely in the ſtraw.

A modern Logician, in a recent publication deſcribing cauſes and effects, has this curious and clear aphoriſm—"When we complain of the ſhortneſs of our memories, we forget what we remember, and remember what we forget."

The profuſion of ſtraw devices which at preſent are crowded upon the heads of our females, give us no remote idea of the ſtraw crowned Queens of Bedlam.——Theſe modern Ophelias have, however, ſyſtem in their madneſs. The enormous pads, or other abdominal protuberances, are ſeen no more; and we now find all the miſſes in the ſtraw; may Heaven ſend them a good deliverance!

In an advertiſement, addreſſed to a young lady who has eloped, ſhe is moſt earneſtly requeſted to return to her moſt diſconſolate parents; but it is added, that, if ſhe does not chooſe to come herſelf, self, she is most particularly desired to send the key of the tea-chest!

Herring Fishery of Ireland.

THE importance of the herring fishery of Ireland may be perceived by the following account:—In the year 1780, one hundred and thirty bounty vessels were at the herring fishery in Lough Swilley, on the north-west coast of that kingdom; they expended in the cure of fish 1708 tons of salt, which cured in bulk (allowing 30 maize, or 15000 fish to one ton of salt) 51240 maize.

In 1781, the bounty vessels in the same Lough, were 147: salt expended 1914 tons; maize or barrels cured 57,420.

In 1781, seventy-one vessels from Liverpool and the Isle of Man, purchased cargoes in Lough Swilley for their red herring houses: they brought per cocket, for curing fish at sea, 650 tons of salt, and with the salt they bought and royaled 3900 maize, for which they paid 8125l. at ten-pence per hundred.

In 1781, one hundred and seventeen vessels from the same places, bought cargoes there for the same purpose. They purchased and royaled with the salt they brought, 49950 maize or barrels, and paid 124871. 10s. so that the above vessels in those two years, purchased in Lough Swilley 88950 maize or barrels, for which they paid cash, and left in Lough Swilley 206121.

Total of herrings taken in two years, by the bounty and red herring men out of Lough Swilley, 197610 maize or barrels.

Epicurean Sporting.

Society of Gormandizers.

SINCE the buck feast given by his grace the Duke of Bedford, the tradesmen of Covent-Garden parish, who are at all times fond of good things, have instituted a society for the purpose of reducing the quantity (not the price) of provisions; and, with this laudable view, the tavern-keepers of that district have agreed in turns, to treat their neighbourly customers with a sumptuous dinner.

The first feast was, in consequence, held at Richardson's, where the company voluptuously gorged themselves with all the dainties of the season, and, lest they might be accused of aping their betters, by soaring too high, were contented with the accommodation of the cellar, in which their delicious banquet was decorated with all the pomp of high life below stairs. Mr. Bacchus Ruby-nose, the wine-merchant, was in the chair, and an excellent chairman he made; for he seemed to know perfectly well how to crack a bottle.

The day was celebrated with the utmost hilarity; but unfortunately, towards the close of the scene, Mr. Skyblue, the milkman, had sacrificed so freely at the shrine of the rosy god, that on his departure, in passing an anti-room, his double-sighted eye was attracted by a large bowl of what he conceived to be the liquor of life, and, exclaiming, "damme, that's your sort!" drank up the whole at a single gulp; but unhappily, this proved to be the slop-water for rincing the dirty glasses, bowls, &c. mixed with stale lemon-peel, which operated as as a potent emetic, and poor Sky-blue immediately discharged his accounts with ample interest upon the floor. We have not heard of any other accident, excepting a trifling injury sustained by the pillars of the Piazza, against which some of the company stag-gering with considerable violence, the contact of their over-charged noddles made several indentions in the stones; fortunately, how-ever, their skulls, being tolerably thick, received no material da-mage. The second entertainment of this guttling club was given a short time afterwards, at the Piazza Coffee-house, where the god of plenty seemed to have retained Epicurus as his caterer, and where jolly Bacchus disposed his blushing beveredge with a liberal hand.

A former feast, we before ob-served, was held in a cellar, and as sounds naturally ascend, the noise of their Bacchanalian revel was heard at a confidarable dis-tance. To obviate what milksops would testily term a nuisance, the visitors, in the present instance, were very prudently elevated to the garret, where Mr. Bellygut Bonyface was unanimously called to the chair, who, after a gorgeous dinner, favoured the company with the song of "Oh what a charming thing is feasting!" In short, the day was spent with the greatest conviviality; and how could it be otherwise, when Mo-mus and Apollo were the props of the chair, and Ceres and Bac-chus purveyors of the feast?

It may be necessary to observe, that these delicious and liberal treats are attended with no other expence to the visitors, than one guinea per head!!!

TURTLE FEAST POSTPONED!!

The committe chosen by the court of assistants of the Iromon-gers' Company, to adjust their last dinner bill, have, in conse-quence of the very high charges, viz.

Haunches, each	£.3	13	6
Pines —	1	11	6
Rock melons -	1	1	0
Small rice puddings,	0	9	0

been under the grating necessity of mortifying the flesh, by putting off their turtle feast! till a more propitious season. The deputy, (good natured soul) taking the hardness of the times into con-sideration, and that economy was the order of the day, proposed to accommodate the company with turtle at the reduced rate of eighteen shillings a quart! instead of a guinea.

After a long debate, this was rejected; but one of the gentle-men, remarkable for his strong attachment to the good things of this world, as well as his great veneration for old customs, pro-posed an application to Mr. An-gell. Honest little Angell having experienced that light gains make a heavy purse, would have sup-plied them at ten shillings and six-pence a quart.

The majority of the committee, who met the next day to consider of the report, were against it. Of course the turtle feast is lost for the present season.

Four knights of the needle, (vulgarly called taylors) a short time since, at Mount Pleasant, Boughton, Northamptonshire, sat down to eight pounds of salmon, two pecks of pease, four pounds of bacon, two pecks of beans, nine pounds of potatoes, fourteen twopenny loaves, with a quantity of cheese, butter, and onions, by way of trimmings, which they went through stitch with so com-pletely, pletely, as to leave altogether a remnant of only two pounds! A pretty tolerable specimen of their ability in the body-lining and twist line.

Mr. PHILIDOR, the CHESS-PLAYER.

A Short time since, this long celebrated foreigner made his last move into the other world. For the last two months he was kept alive merely by art, and the kind attentions of an old and worthy friend. To the last moment of his existence, he enjoyed, though near 80 years of age, a strong retentive memory, which long rendered him remarkable in the circle of his acquaintance in this capital.

Mr. Philidor was a member of the Chess Club near 30 years, and was a man of those meek qualities, that rendered him not less esteemed as a companion, than admired for his extraordinary skill in the difficult game of chess, for which he was pre-eminently distinguished.

It is not two months since he played two games blind-fold at the same time, against two excellent chess players, and was declared the victor. He was besides an admirable musician, and a capital composer.

What seemed most to have shook the poor old man's constitution, and to have precipitated his exit, was not being able to procure a passport to return to Paris to see his family, who resided there, before he paid the last debt of nature; but this refusal was rendered more bitter, on it being intimated that he was a suspected character, and had been one of those persons denounced by a committee of French informers. From the moment he was made acquainted with this circumstance, he became the martyr of grief,—his philosophy forsook him—his tears were incessant—and he sunk into the grave without a groan!

To the EDITORS of the SPORTING MAGAZINE.

GENTLEMEN,

SO generally circulated as your Miscellany is among the fashionable circles here, it has become a matter of no small surprise to me, that our sports and entertainments have never came under your observation. According to the plan which I perceive you have adopted, the following cannot, I presume, but lay claim to your attention; and by the insertion of which, you will greatly greatly oblige

Your's, &c.
CAPT. RAFFLE.

Margate,
Aug. 30, 1795.

THIS place is now pretty full, and can boast, if not of many titles, at least of much genteel company. All the boarding houses are nearly occupied, and bills of "Lodgings to Let" appear but here and there, and are, in consequence of the fine weather, daily diminishing.

The libraries are the places of most fashionable and crowded resort, where raffling agreeably enough passes away the evening, and no murmurs are heard, except among those who raffle "for who should get most." Their common sweepstake raffles of sixpence and a shilling each do not amount to less than four and five pounds pounds each, and all of them in their hearts say with Richard "Now, by St. Paul the work goes bravely on." Many a fair one may be seen shaking the dice-box, with all the tremor of expectation; and a pretty set of features are clouded or lighted up with joy, as the important sound of highest or lowest is pronounced at the summing up of the numbers.

The entertainments at the libraries clash very much with those of the theatre, which is but little frequented—but, truth to say, it is as much visited as probably it deserves, for the company of comedians here furnish but lenten entertainment to the enlightened mind. On Saturday night, Shylock was played by Mr. Garner, who keeps one of the libraries here. His voice is feeble, and his performance not above mediocrity; it is however, but justice to him to say, that he was the best performer who, on that night, "strutted and fretted his hour upon the stage." Wilmot Wells gave general satisfaction in the part of Antonio; as did Melvin, in Bassanio. Richards, though a good actor, is somewhat too old for Gratiano. A gentleman of the name of Rookin played, for that night only, the part of Robin Hood in the after-piece, and acquitted himself to the admiration of all present. A Miss Wilmot, who is shortly to enlist under the banners of Drury-lane, sustained the part of Clarinda with great taste aud spirit, and sung the hunting song with the happiest effect, in which she was encored. The house was considered here as a tolerable one, because it is but seldom half filled.

The sporting shots here have agreed not to take the field as yet, on account of so much grain being still standing in the island of Thanet.

LAW REPORT.

DOCTOR'S COMMONS.

DIVORCES.

BENSON v. BENSON.

THIS was a suit instituted by Henry Benson, against Dorothy, his wife, to obtain a divorce a mensa et thoro, for adultery with Charles Perkins.

A number of witnesses were examined in support of the suit; the substance of whose evidence was, that the parties had been married about nine years, and the issue of their marriage six children. In the month of June, 1794, the plaintiff went into Scotland, upon business which detained him for near two months. On his return to London, he found that the defendant had eloped with Charles Perkins, leaving all the children behind her.

Two witnesses proved that the defendant and Charles Perkins had taken lodgings in Marybone, where they cohabited as man and wife.

The defendant resisted the suit, by a plea of recrimination, in which she alledged that the plaintiff had committed adultery with Mary Price, and that he had for several months prior to the elopement of the defendant, treated her with unmerited severity and neglect.

In support of this plea, two witnesses were called, who stated that the plaintiff had often slept from home; but their evidence did did not subſtantiate either of the material facts ſuggeſted in the plea.

The judge pronounced a ſentence of divorce, from bed and board, during the natural lives of the parties.

DEANE v. DEANE, ESQ.

THIS was a ſuit inſtituted by Amelia Deane againſt Henry Deane, Eſq. to obtain a divorce, for ill treatment, and double adultery with Alice the wife of Joſhua James. After counſel was heard on both ſides, the learned judge pronounced a ſentence of divorce from bed and board during their lives.

EAGLETON v. EAGLETON.

THIS was a ſuit inſtituted by Elizabeth Eagleton, the wife of Edward Eagleton, Eſq. to obtain a ſentence of divorce, for cruel treatment and adultery with Miſs Coventry. It was proved that the parties were married in the year 1782, and the iſſue of their marriage were ſeven or eight children now living. Several of the domeſtic ſervants of the defendant, together with the plaintiff's brother, were called to prove that Mr. Eagleton, without any apparent cauſe, treated his wife on many occaſions with inſult, indignity, and perſonal violence. —Some witneſſes were alſo examined to prove that the defendant had it in deſign to ſhut her up in a mad-houſe, although ſhe was not in any degree afflicted with inſanity. To prove this intended act of cruelty, one of the witneſſes depoſed, that the defendant had ſaid (ſpeaking of the plaintiff) he was preparing ſome very alarming meaſures againſt her, and that ſhe would ſoon be in a ſtate of extreme diſtreſs, or words to that effect. In conſequence of this intention, it was ſtated that application had been actually made to the keeper of a mad-houſe at Hoxton, who being a man of humanity, thought it neceſſary to hold a converſation with the lady, and aſcertain whether ſhe laboured under any mental derangement. The reſult of this converſation was an opinion in his mind, that ſhe was not afflicted with inſanity, and ought not to be confined as a lunatic. The learned judge was of opinion, that both the adultery and cruelty were ſatisfactorily proved. No greater cruelty could be meditated than that of ſhutting up a woman perfectly ſane, in a place appointed appointed for the reception and peculiar treament of unfortunate lunatics. The learned judge then pronounced a ſentence of divorce.

BOW-STREET,

Auguſt 21.

HACKNEY COACHMEN.

ROBERT CHANDLER, alias Bobby Cobby, was examined on a very inhuman and atrocious offence, for the commiſſion of which, it is not much for the credit of ſome perſons then preſent, he was not inſtantly taken up. The tranſaction was briefly thus, and ought to ſerve as a leſſon to other coachmen :—

Mr. Dodd Cooke, a reſpectable perſon, of very advanced age, was in company with two ladies, returning homewards in a one-horſe chaiſe, from Bow through Hackney. The priſoner, who drove the coach, No. 150, came violently up, and expreſſing a very ſcurrilous phraſe, uſual with his brethren of the whip, deſired Mr. Cooke would draw aſide. The manner of his voice and expression manifested the prisoner's malice, but his subsequent conduct evinced his bad intention yet more; for, without allowing Mr. Cooke the least time, he drove furiously against his chaise, and overturned it. Mr. Cooke's arm was dislocated by the fall, and he otherwise much hurt. With much difficulty he was brought to a public-house, where his arm was set by a surgeon.

For this horrid and barbarous conduct, the prisoner was held over in sufficient bail to answer at the session.

At a late assizes in the southern part of Ireland, a Mr. S. actually indicted a young Lady for a rape. —The trial commenced before Lord Clonmel, who would not hearken to so indecent a business. The parties have since been married, and now make a very happy couple.

THEATRICAL REGISTER.

CLOSE OF THE SUMMER THEATRE.

HAYMARKET, Sept. 16.

LAST night a new musical comic piece, in three acts, called the THREE AND THE DEUCE, from the Pen of Mr. Hoare, was performed, for the first time: the characters of which are as follow:

Mr. Milford,	Mr. Benson.
Justice Touchit,	Mr. Suet.
Pertinax Single,	Mr. Bannister, Jun.
Peregrine Single,	Mr. Bannister, Jun.
Percival Single,	Mr. Bannister, Jun.
Mac Floghan,	Mr. Johnstone.
Humphrey Grizzle,	Mr. Fawcett.
Frank,	Mr. Wathen.
Renard,	Mr. Caulfield.
Freeman,	Mr. Bannister.
Emily Milford	Mrs. Gibbs.
Phebe,	Miss Leak.
Taffline,	Mrs. Bland.

The novelty and chief business of this piece consist in the circumstance of three brothers bearing so critical a similarity of person to each other as to render a discrimination between them impossible. Their manners and propensities are, however, essentially different; one being a grave sedentary gentleman, the second a fop, and the third an ideot, which afford an ample scope for the display of young Bannister's versatile powers, who alternately personifies, and is the sole representative of them all, a task which he is enabled to affect by their appearing singly throughout the whole of the plot.—Humphrey is servant to Pertinax Single, as is Renard to Penegrine; and Mac Floghan (an Irish school-master) has the care and education of Percival the ideot, intrusted to him. The mistakes committed by these, in consequence of the striking likenesses of one another, supposed to exist in the three brothers, produce some very whimsical scenes and situations, and afford an infinity of pleasantry and laughter.

The language is, in many parts, neat, and the equivoque sprightly; but the ground work of the piece is too insignificant and unimportant to dwell upon throughout three tedious acts; and, as the incidents are entirely of the nature of broad farce, we would advise the author to compress it into two short acts, by which considerable advantage to himself, and entertainment to the public, must arise. The music is by Storace; we cannot say much for the originality of it, but it is nevertheless pleasing.

The performers exerted themselves to the utmost of their well-known abilities on the occasion. Bannister, Wathen, and Fawcett, were particularly happy; and Miss Miſs Leake and Mrs. Bland were in full tune. When they become more perfect in their reſpective characters, the piece will, we doubt not, acquire a conſiderable degree of merited popularity.

The prologue is of the whimſical kind, and was well delivered by Fawcett.

Mr. Hoare intended to have called this opera One Another; but the whim of Colman exceeded this by giving it the appellation of the Three and the Deuce. He has ſelected the airs, &c. ſome of which are contributed by the firſt amateurs, and he is himſelf perfectly ſcientific*.

The entertainments of this Theatre cloſed laſt night for the ſeaſon, and a very flattering concluſion it was—every part of the houſe literally overflowed.

After the performance of the Three and the Deuce, Mr. Banniſter, jun. came forward, and addreſſed the audience. We were ſo ſituated, that, owing to the preſſure of the crowd, we could not diſtinctly hear all he ſaid.—Such as we were enabled to collect was to the following effect:

"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

"Our ſeaſon expires this evening—Its life has been a ſhort, but a merry one—we hope it has not been ſpent in vain.

"I am commiſſioned by the manager to return you his warmeſt acknowledgements for the plentiful harveſt your liberality has enabled him to reap, and to aſſure you, that while he is ſo happy as to labour in the ſun-ſhine of public approbation, he will never fail to bring New Hay to the Old Market.

"The performers, Ladies and Gentlemen, are alſo anxious to expreſs their deep ſenſe of the obligations conferred on them, and to render you their moſt unfeigned thanks for the diſtinguiſhed and flattering favours they have received. Having ſaid ſo much for ourſelves, we reſpectfully take our leave."

This addreſs was received with reiterated burſts of applauſe; and the audience all departed in good humour, apparently much gratified with the evening's entertainment.

OPENING OF THE WINTER THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN, Sept. 15.

THIS elegant place of rational amuſement and mental entertainment opened laſt night, for the ſeaſon. The curtain drew up to a very genteel audience, and before the dropping of it, the houſe was well filled in every part.

The play preſented on the occaſion was MACBETH;—and what better choice could the manager have made than one of the beſt productions of the immortal bard!

The performance was, on the whole, highly reſpectable. Mrs. Pope, in Lady Macbeth, altho' ſhe wanted the fire of a Siddons in ſome of the paſſages, was, nevertheleſs, every thing that the admirers of true diſcrimination, correct conception, and able exhibition could look for.—Mr. Holman's Macbeth was as much within the bounds of nature as we have hitherto been accuſtomed to witneſs; Macduff had an able repreſentative in Mr. Pope; and Banquo ſat tolerably eaſy on Mr. Harley.

The tragedy was followed by the muſical entertainment of the FARMER, in the caſt of which there was no variation from that of laſt ſeaſon. Munden and Johnſtone were as happy as uſual, in Jemmy Jumps and Valentine; and

* It was our intention to have given a ſpecimen of them in our preſent Number; but for want of room, we have reluctantly deferred them till our next.

and Mrs. Martyr, Mrs. Mountain, and Mrs. Mattocks, never did more juftice to the parts of Molly May-bufh, Louifa, and Betty Blackberry.

The principal performers were all heartily greeted by the audience on their firft coming forward; among thofe who experienced the moft diftinguifhed reception, were, Mrs. Pope, Mrs. Mattocks, Mrs. Martyr, Mrs. Mountain, and Meffrs. Pope, Holman and Munden.

No alteration has taken place in the houfe; indeed none was requifite. The whole edifice exhibits at once a neatnefs and grandeur highly pleafing and gratifying to the fight.

The new tragic actrefs Mifs Gough was introduced to the manager, by the fifter to the Irifh chancellor; her ftay here will be till January, when fhe returns to her Dublin engagement. She ftands, in opinion, like the Siddons, in perfon and manner; with a portion at leaft of her mind.

DRURY-LANE, Sept. 18.

LAST night this elegant theatre opened for the feafon, with the comedy of FIRST LOVE, and the farce of NO SONG NO SUPPER.

The performances were perfectly fmooth, and the ufual emulation was difcoverable to augment reputations fo defervedly acquired.

In the farce Kelly was wanting, and Caulfield fupplied his place.

Mrs. Bland feemed to apprehend a treatment of the harfheft kind——the audience, however, thought only of her fong; and who does not feel that to be perfectly melody.

The property of this theatre, about which fo much has been furmifed, and fo little fettled, has yet undergone no change in fact. The laft engagement in the view of Mr. Sheridan, we underftand, was to this effect:—

He values his property in the Theatre at 111,000l.—this he would throw into 37 fhares at 3000l. a fhare. Mr. Grub, an attorney, was in treaty for 17 of them, and thus raifing 51,000l. upon the property, Mr. Sheridan would ftill retain a moft preponderate controul.

The profits muft be immenfe, to afford fubfiftence to its numerous dependants; for the bare rent and taxes of this half-built ftructure amount to no lefs than 10,000l. per annum.

Young Siddons is about to try his fortune on thefe boards. He is at prefent with his uncle's company in the North.

BRIGHTON, Aug. 20.

Mrs. Clendinning's benefit yefterday evening, was patronized by the Right Honourable the Countefs of Jerfey, which, united with her own merit, produced her the receipt of 80l. She played the Page, in the Follies of a Day; Little Pickle, in the Spoiled Child: and Mifs De Camp's part in the Adopted Child.—After which fhe introduced the Heaving of the Lead, and Black-eyed Sufan.

By the affiftance of Dignum, Sedgwick, and Madam St. Amand, Mr. Bernerd has been eminently fuccefsful. Lady Jerfey is a valuable patronefs to the company.

A play called Louis the Unfortunate, has been got up here, in which the author does not appear to be either fortunate or happy.

A Mifs Betterton has lately ftarted here; fhe is certainly a dramatic prodigy; only 14 years of age, and plays in a fuperior ftyle tragedy and comedy.

Sedgwick's

Sedgwick's benefit was the greatest ever witnessed here; he netted upards of one hundred pounds on the occasion; part of the pit was laid into the boxes. The entertainments were the Castle of Andalusia, Peeping Tom, and New Hay.

The above performer met with a severe misfortune on Thursday last, on the road between Brighton and London. About 18 miles from the former place, as he was getting out of the coach, the step broke down, and he fell with such violence, that it was for some time thought his thigh was broke, but on being examined by a surgeon, it proved to be only very much cut, and the muscle shockingly bruised. It was pronounced impossible for him to proceed on his journey; he was therefore conveyed back slowly to Brighton in a post coach the same afternoon. He is out of danger.

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 20.

Though Fortune and Justice are both depicted blind, they may possibly prove to-night, that their eyes are open; as Mr. M'Cready has fixed upon the Wheel of Fortune to determine whether a good man's reward is merely a lottery; and we doubt not but the justice which is due to his public and private merit, will ensure him a most noble prize. Nor can WE, with justice, after a man has laboured so worthily in his vocation, and so liberally acted, in real life, the part of "Charity's prompt agent," decline to seize this opportune occasion of "putting a fair spoke in his wheel."

SIC TRANSIT GLORIA MUNDI!

"Let but to-morrow, but tomorrow come, and 'ere the shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hum shall ring night's yawning peal," kings, queens, and candle-snuffers, sultans, sophies, and scene-shifters, with all the pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious tragedy and comedy, will be making preparation to shift their ground, and repair once more to their head quarters in the Garden and Old Drury; some with their pockets heavier and their hearts lighter, and some, vice versa, not in the closest intimacy with either mirth or money. But, 'tis all la Fortune de la Guerre, and another season may reward their toils with all the blessings of peace and plenty; a consummation devoutly to be wished, for the sake of those who work for their bread, as well as those who play. At the same time, we congratulate the manager on the deserved success which HE has derived from his labours, which, to please the public, have been somewhat Herculean; and we do not hesitate to say, that, if unwearied assiduity, unexampled liberality, and propriety of conduct in the most unexceptionable degree, can claim a right to our future protection, that right, as future director of our theatre, must be universally acknowledged in Mr. M'Cready.

The private theatricals of Lord Trimblestone, in Ireland, are extremely popular. They always conclude with a pleasant entertainment, in two acts, called Eating and Drinking, in the last of which the performers are not inferior to any in Europe.

Miss Campion, the tragic heroine of the Irish stage, sailed from Dublin a short time since, for America, on a theatrical adventure. She is accompanied by a Mrs. Robinson.

Lee

Lee Lewis, the actor, is going to America, on a theatrical adventure.

Miſs Collins, diſcharged from Drury Lane, purpoſes to ſeek her better fortune in America.

Incledon and Miſs Poole netted 367l. at their benefits in Cork.

Kemble, in Dublin, played Penruddock four times, Octavian thrice, Coriolanus and Richard twice each.

Daly, who had previouſly for a month ſhut his theatre, by the exertions of this actor alone, cleared three thouſand pounds !

Mr. Kemble never played to leſs houſes than, on average taken, between 200l, and 300l. His popularity there exceeded aay thing remembered, and laſted literally to the laſt moment of his ſtay, with conſtant invitations from the noble and the learned all the time.

Mrs. Merry is to perform in Dublin the enſuing winter.

Merry's Cambray Nuns is a dramatic novel upon a real fact, happening in the time of Fenelon —the ſtory infinitely intereſting, and well calculated to convince people, that the old French ſyſtem merited reform.

Young Banniſter's late profeſſional exertions were truly aſtoniſhing. He performed in two pieces on a Tueſday evening at the Haymarket ; on the following day he went to Brighton, for the purpoſe of aiding the benefit of his friend Sedgwick, and performed no leſs than three characters ; and on the Thurſday, he was in both play and farce, at the opening of Drury Lane theatre.

Plymouth has two theatres, the Town and the Dock. Holman played nightly while there, and took them alternately. He has got into an unpleaſant buſineſs— an officer thought proper to knock down his ſervant, and refuſing to make any conceſſion, the matter takes its courſe in the way of proſecution.

Poor Bland is ſo much affected at the late conduct of his wife, that a derangement of intellects, it is feared, will ſucceed the exceſſive grief uuder which he at preſent labours. Mrs. Jordan, who is his ſiſter, has intereſted herſelf on the occaſion in a manner highly creditable to her feelings and ſpirit.

Mrs. Crawford has no intention of performing again. She ſays the ſtyle of acting has been totally changed, and ſhe is too old for novelties. Jordan, however, has her ſincere admiration.

The Richmond theatre has been tolerably ſucceſsful, owing to Mrs. Jordan's exertions.

Mrs. Kemble had 266l. in her houſe—Receipts there unexampled.

Benſon was the author of the dramatic trifle ſhe gave at her benefit.

Mrs. Billington has left Naples for Venice. When recollecting her deceaſed huſband—" Good-natured man,"—ſhe ſings to her paramour—

> " Let earth cover him,
> " We'll dance over him," &c.

Mrs. Siddons appears to have improved her perſonal attractions by her ſummer tour—thoſe of her mind retain their full force— yet yet her action seems to have acquired more vigour than usual.

Mrs. Jordan has received very advantageous offers from the Edinburgh manager; but we believe this inimitable actress will continue to perform the well-known play of "All for Love! or The World well Lost!"

Munden and Bowden have had some verbal sparring, on the subject of the dividend of the profits arising from their late provincial tour.

Holman has had seven benefits in his summer tour, and made 200l. at Birmingham. At Plymouth he played five nights in the week.

Reynolds writes the prologue to his own new comedy.

Boaden is said to have begun a play a-la-Colman.

Miss Farren is arrived in town completely recruited by the waters of Harrowgate; the virtues of which restored Mrs. Siddons, and where the Wallis, then an infant, was seen playing in a barn by Lord and Lady Loughborough.

We have a pleasure in this reference, as it points at a patronage generous beyond example; giving not merely the empty countenance of greatness to merit able to make it own way, but adding the sinews of education, and the polish of manners.

Kemble, unhappily for the stage, has the gout in his feet. He writes, and thinks for it.

"His feet are fetter'd, but his fist is free."
AGONISTES.

Quick's complaint was a spasmodic affection on the lungs, which "declined into a most unprofitable asthma."

"Time," says Lord Bacon, "like a river, brings down every things light and tumid, while it sinks what is ponderous and solid." What a consolation for modern playwrights!

A green-room fracas took place the other day at Margate, between an actress and the acting manager, which ended in the lady's throwing her part in his face:—he, to return the compliment, instantly discharged her in furore.

Lady Wallace is again writing for the stage; her incidents are all drawn from nature; life, let us rather say, for in compliment to the rational part of the community we wish to draw a difference. The circumstance of six ladies assuming the capacities of bailiff's followers, for the purpose of serving an execution in the neighbourhood of Kensington, and the scene of distress that ensued, which drew tears of pity even from the bailiff, if properly dramatized, will be very pathetic. Those, however, who know the warmth and luxriance of her ladyship's fancy, expect something more than frigid sentimentals,

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER.

THIS day have commenced the destructive sports of September: — independently of the previous marches for Norfolk, Suffolk, &c. several detachments of cockney marksmen marched out of the metropolis, last night, in various directions, and attended, as usual, by dogs of various descriptions!

tions!—We are glad to find that in Batterſea, Clapham Common, and ſeveral other counties abounding with game, the pariſh officers have had the humanity to ſend the cryer round, directing all prudent maſters and miſtreſſes to lay a perſonal embargo on their reſpective families, conſiſting of children, hogs, pou'try, &c. &c. during the ſeverity of the firſt days firing, as they regard the ſafety of thoſe relatives, naturally ſo dear to them! A heavy platooning was heard this morning in the line of Kennington Common, before day break.

About three in the morning, three cockney ſportſmen, in their route to Marybone Fields, ſtarted what they fondly hoped was a partridge, near the Middleſex Hoſpital, and, inſtantly diſcharging all their ruſty blunderbuſſes at once, brought down the game, which, however, on their approaching it, proved, alas! to be the watchman's dog! They were all taken into cuſtody, and are likely to turn out fair game for theſe nocturnal guardians.

The ſportſmen in the moſt prolific manners in Norfolk, Suffolk, &c. complain of the ſcarcity of partridges and pheaſants at this ſeaſon? which they attribute to the wetneſs of the ſpring, and the ſharp froſty nights which prevailed about the general time of hatching.

Our accounts from all the ſporting countries ſtate, that the partridges were never ſo generally ſcarce, or the covies ſo ſmall as the preſent ſeaſon.

The gentlemen of Norfolk, and other ſporting countries, had very laudably reſolved not to commence the ſhooting ſeaſon till the 20th of September, that they might not hurt or ſpoil the ſtanding wheat and corn. As no ſuch reſtraint is neceſſary on our London ſportſmen, in their ſearch over game, as their perigrinations generally terminate at Camberwell, Hackney Marſh, Bunhill Fields, Lower Iſlington, Mile End, &c. the following hints may be acceptable.

1. Take a dozen flints, a ſcrew driver, and plenty of rag, leather, and tow.

2. Load your piece before you ſet out, in caſe you ſhould meet any thing on the road.

3. If you are apprehenſive of loſing your bird by its flying over a hedge, let fly through it, and two to one but you hit or miſs.

4. As there are many cunning birds now on the wing, never ſhoot with both eyes ſhut.

5. More than three ſhould never fire at the ſame time, at one object.

A ſportſman, in the neighbourhood of Cheſter, unluckily taking out a dog, of rather a croſs-breed, having a little of the flat-noſe in his form, the creature very ſagaciouſly ſet ſome animals a little larger than partridges; when the ſportſman immediately diſcharged his loaded friend, and, ſtrange to tell, found that, inſtead of a bird, he had very nearly ſhot a bull, a cow, and a covey of pigs.

The Marchioneſs of Saliſbury is preparing to take the field, as the fox-hunting ſeaſon approaches.

His Majeſty's deer in Windſor Great Park, have experienced a ſimilar diſaſter to thoſe of Lord Maynard; the poor people in that neighneighbourhood have eagerly purchased the venison at 4d. per lb.

A few days ago a sturgeon was caught in the river Dee, near Flint, which measured nine feet ten inches in length, and weighed thirteen score. It was exposed for sale in a shop at Chester.

Such vast quantities of fine turbot have been lately caught at Padstow and Port-Isaac, in Cornwall, that they may be bought in Bodmin market for a penny per pound; they are supposed to have pursued the pilchards, of which many hogsheads have been caught.

A gentleman at Margate, who is a most excellent swimmer under water, has actually caught a great number of whitings, in his occasional subaquatic excursions. They call him the otter!

A few days ago, as a gentleman was taking his walk in the neighbourhood of Lewes, his attention was attracted by a hawk in the pursuit of five partridges, till at length one of the birds, to avoid the danger of the attack, precipitately dropped into a hedge, and there, rather than be again exposed to the talons of the hawk, suffered itself to be taken up by the gentleman.

A short time since, Dillow, an old drover of Mile-end, undertook, for a wager of twenty guineas, to run from Whitechapel-church to Romford, and back again in four hours. The distance is twenty-four miles, and he performed his task in three hours and thirty-six minutes. The age of the man, which is fifty-five, and the heat of the weather contributed to enhance the difficulties he had to encounter. Many thousand persons were present, and considerable bets were laid.

A foot-race took place a few days ago, on the road between Whalley and Clitherto (one mile) by three venerable seniors, whose ages together amounted to 256, which was won with ease by the eldest, whose age is 92.

A short time since, a horse-race for 50 guineas was run over Barham-down course, between Capt. Lang and Capt. Spicer, of the South Devon militia; the best of three 4-mile heats, which was won by Capt. Lang. Each gentleman rode his own horse, and many bets were depending.

A mowing match was decided a few days ago, at Finchley; the prize being a fat hog of eight and twenty stone, and a wooden powdering-tub lined with lead. Only married men under one and thirty years of age were allowed to be candidates, of which there were eleven. The winner cut down, and laid in swathe, in a neat and farmer-like manner, two acres of grass, in six hours and forty minutes.

Election venison is so plentiful in the country, this autumn, that the members of several corporations are said to have ate it, till the horns actually begin to grow out of their foreheads!

The once celebrated D—k En———d (for an account of whom see our Magazine, Vol. 2, p. 97) has returned to England, after some years convenient residence on the Continent.

Some few days ago, a very extraordinary accident happened to a boy near Maidenhead, who having put ſome gooſeberries and fiſhing-hooks in the ſame pocket, unluckily ſwallowed one of the hooks, and found part of the line in his mouth, which in endeavouring to pull out, fixed it in his ſtomach; he immediately ran to a ſurgeon, who could not give him any relief till the following expedient happily relieved him:—A ſmall hole being made in a leaden bullet, and the line put through it, the boy ſwallowed the bullet, the ſurgeon held the line, the weight of the bullet looſened the hook, and both were eaſily drawn up.

A ſhort time ſince, a lad of Hemingford Gray, in Huntingdonſhire, being ſent out to fetch a mare from the common, was requeſted by a neighbour to carry home a reaping hook, which the lad imprudently held by the blade in the left hand, at the time he was bridling the mare, when ſhe ſuddenly hung back, and the handle of the reaping hook being entangled in the bridle, the blade was drawn thro' the lad's hand, by which three of his fingers were cut off, and the fourth ſo badly wounded, as to render immediate amputation neceſſary.

Lately a duel was fought near Tralee, between Mr. Ankettle and Mr. Huſſey, both of the town of Dingle. The former was ſhot through the hip, and the latter having received his antagoniſt's ball immediately under the fifth rib of the right breaſt, lingers now without hopes of recovery.

A few Sundays ago, a family met and dined together at Sunbury, in Middleſex, which conſiſted of 2 grandmothers, 4 mothers, 3 fathers, 4 ſons, 6 daughters, 4 brothers, 7 ſiſters, 2 uncles, 6 aunts, 3 nephews, 6 neices, 1 grand-ſon, 2 grand-daughters, and 10 couſins; yet in the whole there were only 15 perſons.

A moſt melancholy accident happened a few days ago at Nemagh, in Ireland. A man borrowed a cat from his brother in order to deſtroy rats. The animal was ſeized with the hydrophobia, and bit the man, his wife, two children, an old woman, and a ſervant maid; the latter of whom expired three days after in dreadful convulſions, and the other ſufferers ſtill labour under the afflicting caſualty without hopes of recovery.

At a wake, a ſhort time ſince, at Stramſhall, a village near Uttoxeter, in Staffordſhire, a diſpute aroſe between two young men, named Taberner and Wardle, which ended in a boxing match. In the ſecond round, an unfortunate blow killed Wardle on the ſpot. An inqueſt was held on the body; verdict—Manſlaughter.

A few evenings ago, about 7 o'clock, a well-known blade ſallied from the Oxford Coffee-houſe, in ſattin pantaloons, and otherwiſe equipped like a city ſportſman, marched with his fowling piece through Fleet-ſtreet. In his net, were a brace of jackdaws, a duck, and a dunghill-cock.——Whether he was a cockney ſhooter, or only meant to ridicule them, we did not enquire; but at all events he afforded much ſport to the populace.

Next Doncaſter meeting, Sir C. Turner's Confederacy, and Lord Fitzwilliam's Evelina, are to run for 200 guineas each, h. ft.

POETRY.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

 The merit of the following Pieces under the fictitious signature of Brush, plainly bespeaks the real name of the ingenious author; on which account we do not hesitate a moment to give place to them.

EXCUSE FOR OBLIVION.

AN EPIGRAM.

MARIA one morning was smitten full sore,
With the tooth-ach's unmerciful pang;
And she vow'd, if she liv'd to the age of five-score,
That she still should remember the fang.

But a skilful young dentist her torture dispell'd,
And so soon sent her anguish to pot,
That mama from her flirting a rat having smell'd,
Cry'd, "Miss, why your tooth's quite [forgot!"
When Miss, having shewn that the grinder was gone,
"To forget 'tis but common," she said,
"Such a thing as we think not worth thinking upon,
"For you see, 'tis quite out of my head."

Birmingham, Sep. 3, 1795. BRUSH.

LIKE NO PART OF LIKENESS.

AN EPIGRAM.

TEADY meeting with Teague upon Waterford quay,
"Arrah now, but," says he, "what's the news of the day?"
"Troth," says Teague, 'none at all at all, worth while to mind,
"Excepting last night, that I saw a great wind!"
"Saw a wind, sure," says Teady, "but that was quite queer;
"Pray what was it like, and how did it appear?"
"It appear'd very frightful," says Teague, "by my sowle,
"For I shook like an asp to see how it did howl;
"And for what it was like, by the King's precious crown!
"But 'twas like——so have blown my poor cabbin quite down!"

BRUSH.

Birmingham, Sep. 13, 1795.

THE NAVAL SUBALTERN.

A LACONIC TALE.

BEN Block was a vet'ran of naval renown,
And renown was his only reward;
For the BOARD still neglected his merits to crown,
As no int'rest he held with my lord!

Yet brave as Old Benbow, was sturdy old Ben,
And he'd laugh at the cannon's loud roar;
When the death-dealing broadside made worm's meat of men,
And the scuppers were streaming with gore!

Nor could a lieutenant's poor stipend provoke
The staunch tar to despise scanty prog;
But his biscuit he'd crack, turn his quid, crack his joke,
And drown care in a jorum of grog!

Thus year after year, in a Subaltern state,
Poor Ben for his King fought and bled;
'Till time had unroof'd all the thatch from his pate,
And the hair from his temples had fled.

When, on humbly saluting with Sinciput bare,
The first lord of the Adm'ralty once;
Says his lordship, "Lieutenant, you've lost all your hair,
"Since I last had a peep at your sconce!"

"Why, my lord," replied Ben, "it with truth may be said,
"While a bald pate I long have stood under,
"There have so many Captains walk'd over my head,
"That to see me quite scalp'd 'twere no wonder.

AN APOTHEOSIS.

THE ARGUMENT.

Parsons, the player,—Parnassus,—Thalia—Melpomene,—and another Epitaph.*

IF Dan Prior tells truth, the gods have their freaks,
And visit this earth ev'ry five or six weeks;
Then wonder we must not, if sometimes a muse
(Who on the top of Parnassus lives like a recluse)

Should trip, these celestial examples to follow,
And scorn all restraint—tho' impos'd by Apollo.
Let those who may doubt, and at this system rail,
Leave doubting a moment, and list to my tale.

When the exit of Parsons from this wicked world
In Parnassus was told to Thalia the gay,
Her garland she tore, and, to vacancy hurl'd,
Sigh'd, sunk, and quite fainted away.

Melpomene seeing her sister betranc'd,
From her sopha most solemnly rose,
With dignified step to Thalia advanc'd—
And hartshorn apply'd to her nose.

* For a sketch of his life, see page 251, Vol. V.

Thus aided, the roses return'd to those cheeks
From which they so lately had fled;
She, with a tear-dripping eye that for sympathy seeks,
Sobb'd—"A-well a-day, Parsons is dead!"
"And, though I must own it's unusual with us,
"I solemnly make my avetment,
"That, let you and Apollo make e'er so much fuss,
"I'll attend at my fav'rite's interment."

"Sure, sister, you're mad; to a fun'ral to go
"In that loose and fantastic attire!
If you must (though your rank you far better should know)
"Slip on my black veil, I desire.

"But e'en then, you're so full of your quips and your cranks,
"You'd better accept of my arm:
"My presence may sanction this simplest of pranks—
"'Twill at least keep your friends from alarm!"

This agreed, the celestials together descend:
At Lee* with the mourners they mix'd,
And Thalia, who felt for the loss of her friend,
O'er the grave, like a statue, stood fix'd.

Her hands clasp'd together, her head bow'd to earth,
She mourfully hung o'er his bier,
And, sorrow usurping the old seat of mirth,
O'er his corpse she dropp'd many a tear.

Melpomene, seeing her sister so griev'd,
Exclaim'd, "O, ye gods what a change!
"By your weeping I hope child, you'll soon be reliev'd,
"But to see you thus tragic is strange.

"Come, hand me your flagelet, garland, and mask,
"In return for my dagger and crown;
If to weep and play tragedy must be your task,
"Pray lengthen the train of your gown.

---

* A town in Kent, the place of nativity of Mr. Parsons; in the church-yard there, is the following epitaph to hss memory:

WILLIAM PARSONS, Esq.
Died Feb. 1795, aged 59.
Here Parsons lies—oft' on life's busy stage,
With Nature, reader, hast thou seen him vie;
He science knew,—knew manners,—knew the age,—
Respected knew to live;—lamented die.

"By

"By your sighs, I suppose, you your seat have resign'd;
I'm a candidate for the succession;
All sorrow, henceforth, I will throw to the wind—
Adieu to despair and depression!

"But, excuse me, to see you put on that long face,
Because a poor player is dead,
Who ridicul'd dignity, pathos, and grace,
And mere Nature set up in their stead.

"To see you, the goddess of smiles, cry, cry, cry,
Compels me to echo with—fie, fie, fie, fie!
And, while you go on, thus to weep and cry la,
I shall add your own chorus of—ha, ha, ha, ha!"

The school-master of Lee, the best poet in the nation,
Being a learn'd man, made record of this conversation,
And said—"To write an epitaph, I myself, I,
Upon said, Master Parsons, will now myself apply;
And, as every line in the whole shall be my own,
I hope 'twill be inscribed on his grave-stone."

THE EPITAPH.

Beneath lies honest Parsons:—When he died,
She who ne'er wept before (Thalia) cry'd;
While grave Melpomene, sedate and holy,
Solemn, severe, and melancholy,
Who ne'er before to smile was known,
Laugh'd at his death and Thalia's moan.
Thus this poor player, who, while on earth,
Gladden'd all hearts with honest mirth,
Dead, (like dramatic writers' scurvy)
Has turn'd two muses topsy-turvy.

THE TIMES.

A SATIRE.

THE times, 'tis true, are hard, most wretched hard,
And call aloud for Charity's regard;
The works of merit unrewarded lie,
And sink regardless in obscurity!—
Yet still I hate to hear this sad knell rung,
So oft' and serious on the tradesman's tongue.—
Behold his dashing son, and tasty wife,
And view his no less tasty daughter's life;
Eager they follow ev'ry silly mode,
That leads to Ruin's dark and drear abode.

Led to the play, no longer in the pit
Will Master Jemmy or Miss Nancy sit;
Each to the boxes, sprucely dress'd, repairs,
Whilst Folly claps her hands, and Reason stares!

The Farmer too (his barns well fill'd with grain,
Repeats, each rising morn, the same dull strain,
Yet he must keep, forsooth, his bit of blood,
Of Driver's progeny, or Trentham's* brood;
Whose birth and parentage are better known,
And can be trac'd much higher than his own,)
Whilst Joan, his daughter, deck'd with passing pride,
Who once rode forth with panniers at her side,
Now keeps her pretty poney for the fair;
And why?—to meet her fav'rite bumpkin there.
And Spendthrift's son must hunt—must shoot—must course,
And therefore keeps his dog—his gun—his horse,
Boasts with his mates, his follies and his crimes,
Yet father, daughter, sons, exclaim—"how bad the times!"

The drunken Journeyman, who leaves his wife
To struggle with the cares of human life,
In some low pot-house spends his weekly pay,
A free companion both by night and day,
Full as a butt, besotted, home he goes,
And, sober, feels of Poverty the woes,
Nor thinks his wants are owing to his crimes,
But, ripe for riot, cries—"how bad the times!"

The reptile Lord (who, four in hand his greys, Whilst beaux commend, and silly lordlings gaze)
With dext'rous manage dashes to the park,
Bespatt'ring, in his way, each well-dress'd spark,
By one continual vertex hurry'd round,
Speeds all the day in pleasure's empty sound;
At night his chariot rattles to the square,
(The duchess keeps a faro table there;)
He gambles high in hope (vain hope!) to win,
And by the knowing-ones is taken in.

---

* Two well-known horses of Lord Egremont's.

Then 'reft of cash, and damn'd by clam'rous cits,
He loses both his patience, and his wits,
And bursteth forth, regardless of his crimes,
With imprecations—on the wretched times.

Behold yon dome, where Thespis holds his court!—
There thousands each theatric night resort,
Is some old play reviv'd, to please the town,
Which sets defiance to the critic's frown;
Comes out some piece whose splendid scenes and dress
On Fancy's gorgeous eye, increasing press;
Where each new scene is gayer than the last,
And yet the first the pride of Rome surpast;*
Fond of nouvelle, behold the million meet,
Each passage throng'd, and crowded ev'ry street.

The wealthy cit (whilst Poverty in vain
From door to door renews her plaintive strain!)
Joins in the crowd,—and, when the farce is o'er,
Retires to spend his guineas with his wh—re.
The morning comes;—Reflections paints his crimes,
And then, bereft of cash, he d—ns the times.

Yet some there are, both commoners and lords,
(And such as these the muse with smiles rewards,
And kings may envy whom the muse regards)
Yet some there are, a noble, gen'rous few,
In these sad times a diff'rent path pursue:
By Honour taught, and bred in Virtue's school,
Guiding their lives by Charity's fair rule,
They ope, with ready hand, their plenteous stores,
And pamper'd Luxury turn out of doors,
Whilst gay Profusion (Want's sure parent) fled,
Fair Hospitality (who hung her head
Almost by England's fav'rite sons forgot)
Her bounties spreads throughout the peasant's cot.
Then, hand in hand, fair Peace and Plenty smile,
And thousands learn to bless their nation's isle.

* The getting up the popular performance of Alexander last season, at Drury-Lane, cost the managers, for dress, scenery, &c. a sum no less than 7000l.!

AN OCCASIONAL ADDRESS,

WRITTEN BY

Thomas Vaughan, Esq.

Spoken by Mr. Miller, the manager, on the 1st of August, the last night of the season of the Peterborough theatre, being his own benefit.

WHEN Thespis, from his two-wheel'd throne—a cart,
First gave his drama-lectures to the heart,
His audience view'd him with a fond delight,
And thought with Pope, "Whatever is—is right."
No demon-critic then with jealous leer,
Made actors tremble—or the bards to fear,
But gave to all applauses warmest due,
And foster'd merit wheresoe'er it grew.
Thus pleased and pleasing have we seen the stage,
Become a kind of charm through ev'ry age;
Holding its mirror up to ev'ry eye,
To shew on which side vice and virtue lye.
Like Thespis then, permit our humble state,
(Though in a barn) to meet no harsher fate.
For though we boast no Garrick—Siddons—here
We rival both in gratitude sincere—
Like them we proudly feel ambition's flame,
To catch a wreath of their excelling fame,
And emulate at least a decent name.

And next, kind friends, permit me to reveal
The partial debt of gratitude I feel—
For this night's lib'ral and protecting show,
Which gives the gen'rous meal to self and co.
And may such bounty never show it less,
To ev'ry object who may feel distress,
'Till coming seasons shall their gifts restore,
And sooth the present sorrows of the poor.
Lastly—May each succeeding year to come,
Bring to us all the cheerful harvest home:
And you—our best of patrons—friends—approve
The efforts which we make—to gain your love.

GAME EPIGRAMS.

On the present suspension to get in the Harvest.

STILE ye the thing an act of grace?
Ah! then all fears relieve;
When death succeeds to pity's place,
'Tis MURDER to reprieve.

ANOTHER.

Come, brothers, feast from Ceres' horn,
September's dangers fly;
Let men but once get in their corn,
And then we surely die.

PARTRIDGE.
